BLANTON REFUSES AID AT BURLINGAME TRIAL; PALMIST IS IN DOUBT

Texan Issues Statement Refusing to Appear, or Be "Goat."

HOLDS MRS. BLALOCK NOT NEEDED, HE SAYS

Health Impaired, He Says, Telling of Long Rest He Is to Take.

BRIDE IS "SURPRISED" AT NEWEST TANGLE

Refuses to Comment Now, but Will Make Views Known Tomorrow.

Representative Thomas L. Blanton, of Texas, last night declared emphatically he would not be a witness in the Burlingame case. The Texan also indicated that Mrs. Helen Blalock, Seventh street palmist, who preferred serious charges against Capt. Guy E. Burlingame to a congressional subcommittee, would not testify against her former friend.

Blanton, in a statement given to The Washington Post last night, said District officials handling the Burlingame case had no excuse for attempting to drag him into the trial of Capt. Burlingame, which is expected to be held within the next week or ten days.

"I am not going to be their 'goat' in their police scandals. I don't intend to allow District officials, whose actions it has been my sworn duty to investigate and criticize, to embroil me and subject me to malicious indignities, in unfounded retaliation," Blanton said.

Denies Palmist Is Needed.

"Mrs. Blalock is not needed to prove that he wrote the letters," Blanton added, in referring to the several "love notes" alleged to have been written to her by Capt. Burlingame and one of which was signed "Heartsore Daddy."

Blanton's decision to wash his hands of the Burlingame case and his indication that Mrs. Blalock would not appear to testify against her former friend, further complicated the situation, and left Corporation Counsel William W. Bride, who will prosecute the case, literally "holding the bag," as only Saturday he announced that Blanton had promised him his utmost cooperation in the case and that he intended calling the Texan as the star witness, providing Mrs. Blalock could not be located.

When informed by a reporter for The Washington Post last night that Blanton had said Mrs. Blalock's presence was not needed at the trial, Bride replied:

"I'm running this trial and not Blanton."

When informed by the reporter also that Blanton had said he would not appear as a witness in the case, Bride seemed interested at the turn of events and asked, "What else did he say?"

Statement Issued by Blanton.

The following statement of Blanton then was read to him:

"I did not authorize the references about me in Sunday's papers. Many purported interviews recently published were manufactured.

"I am not to be a witness in the Burlingame case. If I had personal knowledge of any material fact necessary to its adjudication, I would willingly testify. But I know of no fact needed in Burlingame's trial. I was merely the medium through which unfortunate Mrs. Blalock sent her complaint and documentary evidence to the authorities.

"The District government should now file its own complaint. Its only concern should be, 'Did Burlingame write the letters?' If he did, he should be put off the force.

"Mrs. Blalock is not needed to prove that he wrote the letters. And it is not necessary to show that they came to the authorities through me.

prove by experts beyond peradventure

"It doesn't matter how they got hold of them. The District government can of a doubt that Burlingame wrote the letters. He will not deny that he wrote them.

Not Going to Be Goat.

"It can produce the typewriter from Burlingame's office upon which he wrote them. That should be sufficient. There is no excuse for attempting to drag me into the trial.

"I am not going to be their 'goat' in their police scandals. I don't intend to allow District officials, whose actions it has been my sworn duty to investigate and criticize, to embroil me and subject me to malicious indignities, in unfounded retaliation.

"About 1,400 worthy policemen here are my dependable friends, and appreciate and are grateful for my having secured for them their uniforms and one day off each week, and my helping to get them a living basic

Depew's Widow Gives Chair Fund to G. W. U.

Endowment of $120,000 Is Made as Memorial to Her Husband.

In memory of her husband, the late senator, Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew has endowed George Washington University with the income from $120,000 in perpetuity, to establish a department of public speaking at the university, Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin, president of the university, announced yesterday.

The gift will make possible establishment of a new chair in public speaking and probably at least one assistant professorship next fall and will enable the university to offer an elaborate program of elementary and advanced work in the art of public speaking, Dr. Marvin said.

A new feature of this department will be courses especially designed for Government officials, members of Congress, the younger attaches of the State Department, as well as work for students who expect to enter business and professional life, where they are constantly called upon to make public addresses.

In referring to the gift, in the first press interview Mrs. Depew has given in many years, she said:

"I am giving this chair of public speaking to George Washington University as a memorial to my husband. He was devoted to the Capital and during his two terms as United States senator frequently delivered speeches there. I am confident that he would be happy to have his memory per-

BOY KILLS HIMSELF; SENT FATHER AWAY

Economist Finds Him Victim of Gas on Returning to Their Apartment.

NEURASTHENIC, IS CLAIM

New York, Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Wallace Rogers, 18-year-old son of Bruce Rogers, economist and contributing editor of The Nation, was found dead today in a Greenwich Village apartment he shared with his father. Gas was flowing from three burners of a range, and from a light jet. Police said he had committed suicide.

The father told police he and his son had an agreement that when one wished privacy, the other would stay elsewhere for the night. After dinner last night, he said, Wallace asked that he be left alone for the night and the father went to the apartment of Hartwell S. Shippey, on the floor below.

Unable to gain entrance to the apartment this morning, the father told Shippey the door was secured. Shippey climbed the fire escape, from which he saw the boy's body in the bed. The two men then forced the door, and an ambulance surgeon said the youth had been dead for several hours.

The boy left no notes and the father told police his son never had spoken of suicide. He told police the boy was "high strung and neurasthenic," but could give no other reason for the suicide.

Rogers, his son Wallace and another son, Robert, who is 23 and married, returned from Europe six months ago.

HOOVER DUE HOME AT 2:30 TOMORROW

Decides to Resume Work at S Street House; Much Already Accomplished.

NOT TO STOP EN ROUTE

By CARLISLE BARGERON.

Miami Beach, Fla., Feb. 17.—President-elect Hoover leaves at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow for Washington, preparatory to being inaugurated two weeks hence. Unlike other men who have come to take up the Nation's highest office his will be no triumphal entry on the eve of his assumption of the chair. He is simply returning unostentatiously to his adopted home for two weeks of heavy work, a work that it is believed will continue as long as he remains in the White House.

He plans no stops between here and Washington beyond those required for the operation of his train, so the only cheering groups to greet him will be those who snatch glimpses of him now and then. He will arrive at Washington Tuesday at 2:30 o'clock.

Just how much work awaits him in his S street home between now and March 4 can not be definitely told. He has done some work down here, but he has also played, played in about in the only way his restless disposition will permit. He has fished to his heart's content.

Undoubtedly he has done a lot of work on his inaugural message and his private telephone lines between here and Washington have been kept fairly busy. It can not be said either that he has waited until the last two weeks before arriving at fairly definite conclusions about his cabinet and count-

100-Foot Drifts Cut Down To Reach Snowbound Town

Colorado Relief Crews Hope to Avert Food Shortage at Silverton; Avalanches Block Rails in Mountain Passes; Cold Hampers Work of Plows.

Durango, Colo., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Relief from a food shortage that is rapidly becoming serious was in sight tonight for the isolated town of Silverton, Colo., as large forces of workers continued to cut through mountains of snow, which have blockaded the once-famous mining camp since February 3.

Great avalanches which have buried the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad tracks into the town under snow to a depth ranging from 6 to 80 feet are expected to be cleared away within three days to enable a train to pull into the town with food and commodities. A severe cold wave which followed the snow slides in this vicinity froze the masses of snow almost as hard as solid ice, retarding the progress of shovelers.

Railroad officials expect to run the first train in two weeks into the snow-bound city, which has a population of about 1,000, and to the mining camp of Eureka nearby, where miners and their families number over 500, before the supplies of butter, eggs and meat are completely exhausted.

The greatest obstacle in the way of the workers, the slide at Needleton, a few miles from Durango, on the way to Silverton, was pentrated yesterday. This slide buried the tracks under nearly 100 feet of snow over a half-mile stretch.

A work train equipped with a large rotary plow, left here early today to buck numerous smaller slides in the vicinity beyond Needleton. The workers expected to clear several of the slides some time tonight, and to attack another large slide at Mile Post 488½, the only serious avalanche now obstructing their progress.

Meantime Silverton spent its usual quiet Sunday, with no word from the outside world except what might have been sent over a lone telephone circuit into the city. Sixty pounds of first class mail are being transported across the slide area by Charles Myers and Henry Logan, who were engaged as runners to deliver letters to the mining camp on snowshoes.

Several men who tried to send supplies to the city on a string of twenty

COL. LINDBERGH HERE FOR NIGHT ON RETURN TRIP

Plans to End Long Air Journey by Jump to New York Today.

WILL NOT BE PRESENT AT INAUGURAL PARADE

Mention of Engagement to Anne Morrow Gets Only Silence From Flier.

Speeding in his fast Falcon biplane before a light tail wind, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh landed at Bolling Field yesterday afternoon at 3:32 o'clock, nearly completing the last leg of his trail-blazing flight to South America.

He was escorted by Col. C. E. Culver, commandant of Langley Field, Va., who was flying a Douglass O-2H light bomber. Col. Lindbergh had stopped at Langley Field for fuel and luncheon and for a brief visit to friends. He left there at 2:25 o'clock, making the trip in little more than one hour.

After an interview with newspapermen at Bolling Field, he drove into Washington with Maj. Thomas G. Lanphier, of the Transcontinental Air Transport, and Clem Gerson, chairman of the hotel committee of the National Aeronautic Association. He spent last night at the Carlton Hotel, expecting to leave for New York some time today

Will Not Attend Inaugural.

It was learned that Col. Lindbergh will not be present at the inauguration of Herbert Hoover as President of the United States.

The fact that the flying colonel will be on the West Coast at the time will prevent his attending the inaugural ceremonies which will bring to Washington one of the greatest concentrations of aircraft ever seen in this country. He is starting shortly on a tour of the route of the Transcontinental Air Transport, and will not have returned until after the inauguration.

In striking contrast to the earlier stages of his trip, the flying colonel had excellent weather from Langley to Bolling. Since leaving the Pan-American Airways Sikorsky Amphibian which he had flown on his South American trip, at Miami, Fla., and starting north in his own Falcon he had encountered extremely bad flying weather. He was forced to make two night stops, one in each of the Carolinas, on a trip which ordinarily would have required him hardly more than a day's flying

Two Forced Landings.

After being forced by fog and rain to land at Charleston, S. C., Friday night, and starting once more for Washington Saturday morning, he was again forced down by fog on the hard sand beach at Hatteras Inlet, N. C. He spent Saturday night at the Coast Guard station there, intending to take off again for Washington at 6 o'clock yesterday morning. However, fog conditions were so bad at that time he was forced to delay his start until 9:25 o'clock. He then landed at Langley Field.

A small crowd which had gathered as early as 8:30 o'clock yesterday morning to greet Col. Lindbergh gradually increased throughout the day until several hundred persons were on hand when he finally landed. Most of the crowd thought that Col. Culver's Douglass was Col. Lindbergh's and made a mad dash for it while the latter sat quietly in his Falcon far out in the Chicago, Feb. 17 (A.P.).—A Chicago & Northwestern passenger train crashed into an automobile bearing members of the family of Salvatore Cascino to the bedside of a dying relative here today, killing three and injuring the other three.

The dead are: Mary, 22; Tony, 11, and Virginia, 17. Mr. and Mrs. Cascino and Marion, 18, another son, were seriously injured.

Girl Still in Coma 9 Days After Hurts

Basket Ball Team Captain Is Little Changed; Doctors Predict Recovery.

Charlotte, N. C., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Nine days had elapsed at 6 o'clock tonight since Miss Nell Fincher, 17-year-old Derita High School basket ball captain, had received the injury that has kept her in an unconscious condition.

Nurses at a hospital here, watching the girl, said they could see little change in her condition. Her physicians, however, are hopeful for her recovery, even after more than 200 hours in which she has not spoken and apparently has no knowledge of conditions around her.

The girl was hurt practicing basket ball. She fell backward in jumping for the ball and struck her head on the hardwood floor.

Although she has opened her eyes occasionally, nurses say she shows no sign of recognition.

LIQUOR BOUGHT AT 342 PLACES HERE, IS CLAIM

Undercover Agents' Work Revealed by Howard at Dry Meeting.

POLICE FORCE BLAMED; 'HIGHER-UPS' ALSO HIT

President Could Remedy the Situation, Mass Meeting Is Told; Report Adopted.

Thrusts at the Washington Police Department and at members of Congress "who enjoy immunity in their speeches in Senate and House," but haven't the courage to "tell the American people what they know about liquor conditions" stood out from Clinton N. Howard's address to a mass meeting at the Eastern Presbyterian Church, Sixth street and Maryland avenue northeast, yesterday afternoon.

Asserting that investigators working under the National United Committee for Law Enforcement, of which he is chairman, had uncovered 342 places in Washington "in which wine, gin, red liquor, corn or whisky, was being sold, and purchased by the drink and bottle," Howard asked: "Where were the police?"

"Palms Out," Charge.

"They were walking by with noses in air and itching palms stretched out behind," he answered.

"The police may be handicapped by lack of District enforcement laws," he declared, "available appropriations and unsupported by courts and juries, as is claimed, but it is not helpless.

"If there are grafting captains and policemen, as is charged and believed, it would be compounding lawlessness to furnish them with information to be used for additional shake-downs.

"Responsibility Higher Up."

"While the Police Department is not to be excused for conditions that exist, and are culpable or incapable if the conditions are permitted to continue under such authority as they possess, and inexcusable for making no visible attempt to suppress them, the real responsibility rests higher up."

Howard was applauded when he asserted "If Nathan were the prophet here he would say to the President, 'Thou art the man.' At any time during the past seven years the President could have corrected these conditions in his National Capital," he declared.

The speaker's thrust at Congress was the expression: "If Daniel were here he would say to Congress, sitting in the midst of this drunken revelry, 'Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting.'"

It was in alluding to the difficulty he has had in bringing members of Congress to his meetings for speeches that Howard said he had told a friend recently that he was "through with these men on the Hill."

"These courageous men who have immunity from the consequences of their remarks on the floor of Congress," he said sarcastically, "I wish they had the courage to come out and tell you—tell the American people—what they know about liquor conditions."

One Woman Dissents.

Howard's declaration that the President is responsible for conditions in Washington led to expression of a note of disharmony. At conclusion of his address, a motion was made and seconded that that portion of his speech referring to the President and Congress be printed and sent to Mr. Coolidge, and each member of the House and Senate and to every pastor in the city.

The motion was carried with one dissenting vote. An unidentified woman asserted that in her opinion the Dis-

Mud Wrecks Plane Of Navy Air Chief

Ship Dives Into Earth Trying to Get Loose After Landing.

A De Havilland Moth plane, piloted by Edward P. Warner, Assistant Secretary of the Navy in charge of aeronautics, nose dived yesterday at Bolling Field while efforts were being made to extricate it from the mud under its own power.

The Secretary and Capt. Frank Courtney, British ace and owner of the plane, had been for a spin aloft and had just made a perfect landing when the wheels and skid stuck in the mud which covered the surface of the field. Warner attempted to get the plane out of the muck and gave it the "gun," but instead of moving forward the plane's nose dipped and dug into the mud while its tail reared ludicrously into the air.

Neither Warner nor Courtney was injured, but the plane's propeller was broken.

E. L. DOHENY, JR., SLAIN BY SECRETARY'S SHOT; MAN THEN KILLS SELF

Ned Doheny Gave His Life to Save Friend, Says F. R. Kellogg.

GRAPPLED FOR PISTOL, IS TELEPHONE STORY

Plunkett and Man He Slew Classmates and Life-Long Intimates.

OIL MAGNATE'S DREAM SHATTERED BY BULLET

Elder Doheny Looked to His Son to Carry Name to Old Place of Power.

New York, Feb. 17 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Frederic R. Kellogg, the New York lawyer who has represented Edward L. Doheny, sr., and his son for several years, said tonight that he had heard the details of the shooting over the long distance telephone from Los Angeles.

"Ned Doheny died the finest kind of a death," Mr. Kellogg said. "He died trying to help a friend."

"Hugh Plunkett and Ned were classmates. I knew them both and they were quiet, even-tempered young fellows who liked each other. Their friendship endured through the years of youth and young manhood, and when Plunkett several years ago needed outdoor employment, he was used by the Dohenys on their properties.

"He acted as a secretary to Ned, but their relationship was more that of friends. A few weeks ago Plunkett showed signs of a nervous breakdown. Young Doheny called a doctor for him, and when the physician said Plunkett would have to have constant care Ned took him into the house. He thought he could watch him and help him personally more than any other person could.

Tried to Get Gun.

"As I have been informed over the telephone, Plunkett suddenly went insane Friday night. He was evidently intent on killing himself, and Ned grappled with him and cried for some one to call for a doctor. He was waiting for the doctor to arrive when Plunkett shot him. Plunkett turned the gun on himself and fired another shot. He died intsantly, but Ned lived for about 20 minutes.

"Ned made a great sacrifice. He gave his life. He was, I suppose, the heir of the elder Doheny, and while I have no idea of the size of the Doheny fortune, it is very large."

Estimates of the Doheny fortune, which Edward L. Doheny, jr., would have inherited if he had lived, have varied from $100,000,000 to $250,000,000.

The bullet fired by Plunkett shattered the greatest dream of old Edward L. Doheny, who scrabbled through the mountains and deserts of the old West seeking gold and oil, who came to his first millions just as his only son was coming into the world and who looked to that son to carry the Doheny name back to the powerful place the old man had won for it in this country and in all the mineral countries from Siberia to Central America.

In Navy in World War.

His son and the son's five children were the only real interest in the old oil man's heart in recent years, associates here say. His dream was to make them understand that he acted from honest motives in his oil deals with

ROCKEFELLER BUYS WAKEFIELD ESTATE

Pays $115,000 for 267 Acres of Washington Birthplace for Memorial Society.

COST MAY BE $500,000

New York, Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Purchase by John D. Rockefeller, jr., of 267 acres of the Wakefield estate, on which George Washington was born, in Westmoreland County, Va., was announced today.

The purchase was made for the Wakefield National Memorial Association, which is preparing to rebuild Wakefield, the house in which Washington was born, in time for the bicentenary celebration in 1932.

The property, consisting of woodland and cornfields, fronts the Potomac River, and on it stands the Washington family graveyard, in which are buried Col. John Washington, first of the Washington family in America, who came from England in 1656, and died in 1676, and members of seven succeeding generations who possesesd the estate during 152 years.

Eleven headstones now stand in the cemetery. The burial ground was conveyed to the Wakefield Association last year by Washington heirs, W. Lanier Washington, Mary Washington Keyser, Washington Perine, George C. Perine, Marie Perine Platt, Mildred Washington Perine, Ezra Washington Perine, and Eleanor Washington Freeman.

Mr. Rockefeller paid $115,000 for the tract.

When his interest was attracted to the estate, Mr. Rockefeller organized the River Holding Corporation, which

Leadership in Arms Parley Will Be Given to Hoover

Great Britain and Other Powers Will Delegate Authority to Him to Act When He Assumes Office as President.

By ALBERT W. FOX.

Leadership in dealing with the naval limitation problem is to be delegated by Great Britain and other interested powers to Herbert C. Hoover, as soon as the latter assumes control of the Nation's foreign affairs on March 4. This explains the reason for the British government's disclaimer of any effort to revive the question at the present time.

The misconceptions abroad, the false interpretation given here to the recent statement of Sir Esme Howard, the British Ambassador, and the false hopes which the idealists entertain are all attributable, it is authoritatively explained, to lack of proper understanding of the naval and diplomatic problem involved.

This misunderstanding is so widespread in America, one of the diplomats suggests that it is the part of wisdom to smother further aimless discussion until Mr. Hoover reaches the White House.

Mr. Hoover must then assume leadership in the international arms limitation program whether he desires it or not. By solemn treaty obligation he is pledged to call the next scheduled conference in conformity with the following provision of the Washington naval treaty, signed February 6, 1922:

"In view of possible technical and scientific developments, the United States, after consultation with the other contracting powers, shall arrange for a conference of all the contracting powers which shall convene as soon as possible after the expiration of eight years from the coming into force of the present treaty to consider what changes if any in the treaty may be necessary to meet such developments."

It is therefore mandatory upon Mr. Hoover to call the conference and there is no need whatever for the prospective propaganda of the internationalists urging him to do so.

Furthermore, work in anticipation of this conference has now been proceeding in an orderly fashion for months and even years and American representatives are assisting in this work.

Thus, the clamor for a hasty conference in advance of the necessary labor

First Bullet Is Fired as Doctor Enters Home to Treat Employe.

SLAYER, LONG NERVOUS PATIENT, THOUGHT MAD

Bars Door of Room to Physician; Second Report Tells of Suicide.

MEN CLOSE FRIENDS OUTSIDE OF BUSINESS

Beverly Hills, Calif., Officials Begin Inquiry at Once Into Tragedy.

Los Angeles, Calif., Feb. 17 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—E. L. Doheny, jr., 36-year-old multimillionaire oil magnate, who with his father, E. L. Doheny, figured in the Teapot Dome senatorial case, was shot and instantly killed shortly before midnight last night in the Doheny mansion in Beverly Hills, by his secretary and companion, Hugh Plunkett.

Plunkett shot himself to death with the same .45 caliber revolver in Doheny's room a few minutes later, when Dr. L. C. Fishbaugh, Doheny's physician, tried to disarm him.

Unusual phases of the double tragedy resulted in District Attorney Buron Fitts' launching an immediate and secret investigation in the room where the killing and suicide took place.

The slaying occurred between 11 o'clock and midnight last night. No report was received until 2:40 a. m. In the meantime the district attorney, his chief investigator, Lucien Wheeler; Police Chief Blair of Beverly Hills, and Deputy Sheriff William Bright, in charge of county homicide investigations, had conducted a preliminary inquiry.

Father Is First Questioned.

E. L. Doheny sr., who was his only son's senior partner in the Doheny oil corporations, was informed and privately questioned by the officials before any outsiders arrived. Members of the dead millionaire's household also were questioned in secret. Results of Fitts' midnight murder quiz were not publicly announced.

The senior Doheny declined to talk to any one except officials.

Fitts issued a brief statement, giving it as his opinion that Plunkett had suddenly become deranged following a year of nervous illness and had shot his employer.

A later session in the district attorney's downtown office this afternoon resulted in fuller details. According to a reconstruction of the tragedy, as brought out in the afternoon's questioning, Plunkett, who had been both secretary and personal companion of the younger Doheny for the past eight years, arrived at Greystone, Doheny's Beverly Hills home, early last night.

Urged to Enter Sanitarium.

Plunkett had been living in Los Angeles and his visit was probably unexpected as he had been to confer with his employer in the afternoon, when Doheny and Dr. Fishbaugh had both urged Plunkett to go to a sanitarium.

The secretary and Doheny talked for some hours, Plunkett apparently being highly excited. As told by Dr. Fishbaugh, Plunkett had been taking treatments from him for some time, having been suffering for a year with a nervous affliction. Recently he contracted a bad cold and with it tonsilitis. Dr. Fishbaugh was to perform a tonsil operation upon Plunkett tomorrow. Doheny had helped to arrange the operation.

About 10:30 o'clock Saturday night, the doctor said, he received a telephone call from Doheny at a theater in downtown Los Angeles. Doheny urged the doctor to come to the Beverly Hills place at once and see what he could do toward giving Plunkett relief from a pain in the throat and soothing the man's hysteria.

It is a 25-mile drive from downtown Los Angeles and it was after 11 o'clock when the physician arrived at the Doheny estate.

Mrs. E. L. Doheny, jr., the former Lucia Smith, Pasadena society woman, let the physician in. There was a loud sound to which neither at the time attached note, and the physician and Mrs. Doheny walked down the hallway toward the millionaire's bedroom, which is the only bedroom on the first floor.

"As we approached the door," the doctor said, "it opened and Plunkett, looking haggard, rushed into the hall. 'Don't come into this room,' he ordered us. I went a bit ahead of Mrs. Doheny to the room and the door slammed shut against me. There was a shot, and when I rushed in both were dead."

Mr. Doheny had been killed with a single bullet, fired from about 8 feet, striking him in the left temple. Plunkett shot himself through the forehead. The millionaire's body was clad in a green night gown and a dressing robe. Plunkett was fully clad. According to Mrs. Doheny and the doctor, they knew of no motive for the killing other than the sudden impulse of a crazed mind.

Took Sleeping Powders.

During the conference in the district attorney's office this afternoon Dr. Fishbaugh stated: "For the past six months the secretary, Plunkett, has been under steady treatment for a nervous trouble, and, because he was unable to sleep, he had been taking very strong sleeping powders. He seemed at times on the verge of going to pieces."

A few minutes prior to Dr. Fishbaugh's departure from the district attorney's office, Prosecutor Fitts asserted that there was no reason to hold the physician, but requested him to hold himself in readiness for any call for further testimony. Just as the doctor was leaving the courthouse investigators from the district attorney's office came in from the Doheny home with what they described as cocktail glasses and a whisky bottle. Dr. Fishbaugh denied that bottles, glasses or any evidences of drinking had been in the death room when he went there. He said, "I am sure that Mr. Doheny's only interest was in inducing Mr. Plunkett to accept his advice and enter a sanitarium for complete rest."

Plunkett Here in 1924.

Apparently Plunkett served as a sort of oil tutor for young Doheny. When the Government summoned the latter as a surprise witness against his father in 1924, Plunkett also appeared in Washington. Young Doheny at that time declined to answer questions on the ground he might incriminate himself as well as his father's half score oil corporations.

At this time many asked the question, "Who is Plunkett?" But the secret of the secretary's position as a member of the Doheny group was kept successfully. However, it was noted that Plunkett and young Doheny were the closest personal friends. They appeared inseparable while in Washington.

Plunkett is said to have maintained an apartment in New York for years. But when his employer and friend sold his modern four-story residence at 15 East Eighty-fourth street, just off Fifth avenue, to Ogden Reid for $430,000 in 1927 Plunkett followed Doheny, jr., to California. There they remained firm friends and were almost constantly together.

Little Known of Plunkett.

Coroner Frank Nance ordered the bodies removed and an inquest will be held tomorrow or Tuesday in a Beverly Hills undertaking parlor.

Plunkett was 34 years old and little is known of his private life, except that he was for some time in Mexico; that he was divorced in California about four months ago, and that he had been brooding over some secret personal matter for more than a year, during which his mood and depression changed so materially as to compel medical treatment for a nervous disorder.

Plunkett was a stenographer in the office of E. L. Doheny, sr.'s, Mexican Petroleum Corporation when he came to the latter's personal attention fifteen year ago. The senior Doheny promoted him to his staff of private secretaries. Eight years ago the younger Doheny took over the services of Plunkett, made him his personal secretary, and still later made a personal companion of him.

Plunkett became an intimate personal friend of the entire Doheny family.

Children Learn of Tragedy.

Officers, seeking to learn of his past, discovered that Plunkett's father lived in a little flat in southwest Los Angeles, but knew little of his son's movements. The shot which killed Mr. Doheny failed to attract the attention of his household, but the second shot, which snuffed out the life of Plunkett, aroused "Larry" (Edward Laurence) Doheny, 11 years old, and little Tim, two of the dead millionaire's five children. The children were quieted without learning until this afternoon of their father's death. Lucille Estelle, William Henry and Patrick Anson Doheny, the other children, also were asleep in the home, but were unaware of the tragedy.

Mrs. Doheny was near collapse, and was attended by Dr. Fishbaugh. After a brief talk between herself and her father-in-law, the latter stated that funeral services for his son will be conducted privately at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning and that burial will take place in the temple at Santa Sabina, which stands on a knoll in Forest Lawn Cemetery here. The Temple of Santa Sabina formerly stood on one of the seven hills of Rome, was bought bodily by the senior Doheny, taken down and transported to this country where it was reerected. Relics of the martyred St. Sabina are inclosed in the temple.

Funeral services for Plunkett have not yet been arranged.

FREIGHTER SHIP SAFE, SAYS RESCUE LINER

"Padnsay O.K., Proceeding to Destination," Is Cryptic Radio From the Harding.

GEAR BELIEVED REPAIRED

New York, Feb. 17 (A.P.).—The American freighter Padnsay was reported safe today, 24 hours after she had broadcast an S O S from the storm-swept North Atlantic.

A radio message from Capt. William Rind, of the United States liner President Harding to the New York offices of the line told of the safety of the vessel for which three ships had searched during the night.

It was couched in the cryptic language used by seamen and gave no details.

"Padnsay O. K.," Capt. Rind's message read, "proceeding to destination."

Officers of the line said no further report was expected and in shipping circles it was believed that the crew of the Padnsay had been able to repair the damage to the ship's steering gear.

The distress call of the freighter was picked up yesterday by the liner President Harding, which immediately turned from its course for Bremen, Germany, to search for the ship. The message from the President Harding said the freighter's rudder was gone and gave the position of the distressed freighter as about 300 miles south of Cape Race, N. F. The steering gear of the Padnsay presumably had broken something during the 36-hour storm that swept the Atlantic steamer lanes.

The President Harding steamed approximately 300 miles through a heavy storm to the position where the Padnsay presumably would have drifted, reaching that place about 3 o'clock this morning.

"At 3 a. m. arrived at position presumably where Padnsay would have drifted since 8 a. m. yesterday," read a wireless message from Capt. Rind to the line's office here at 6:30 o'clock this morning. "Working back along her drift, northing seen or heard of Padnsay. The other ships searching. Stay until daybreak. Very heavy snowfall. Now 6:30 a. m. Proceeding to Plymouth."

Nothing further was heard here until shortly before noon today, when the message from Capt. Rind reporting the freighter safe was received.

Force Used to End Man's 35-Day Fast

Uncles of "Devil Faster" Make Evangelist Tell Kin to Take Food.

Lima, Ohio, Feb. 1 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Two uncles of Fred Conrad, 27-year-old son of a well-to-do grocer of the town of New Hampshire, who has been fasting for 35 days "to drive the devil out of his father and all the sinners of the village," have forced the evangelist, who has openly encouraged the youth's ordeal, to tell him to put an end to his fast.

The uncles, Dr. J. B. and E. T. Conrad, of Magnetic Springs, went to the home of the evangelist, Rev. Ray Dotson, about midnight and forced him to accompany them to the home of John Pepple, Fred's father-in-law, where the young man is being held incommunicado.

Weak and on the verge of hysteria from his 35-day fast, Fred Conrad heard the revivalist grudgingly admit, under urging from the uncles, that he did not believe that a fast of such long duration "was right in the sight of God." Intimate friends of the "devil faster" said some hours later that young Conrad had been persuaded to take a small amount of broth.

Survey Finds Only Two Big 5-Cent-Fare Cities

New York, Feb. 17 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Of the 25 largest cities in the United States, New York and San Francisco are the only ones to maintain on their street railways a 5-cent fare with free transfers, the Merchants Association announced yesterday after a survey conducted with the cooperation of the Kansas City Chafber of Commerce.

The survey shows that the average street car fare in these cities in 7½ cents. Ten cents, the basic fare in Boston, is the maximum charged in any city. Buffalo and Seattle also have a 10-cent fare, but with the proviso that three tickets can be bought for 25 cents.

DOHENY, SAYS LAWYER, DIED AIDING FRIEND

the country and he wanted them to get that message eventually through to the country.

Edward L., jr., was in the Navy during the World War, and during the oil investigations his friends said that he first heard from naval officers that it would be a fine thing if private capital could be brought into use to tank the seepage in the great Government oil fields.

In the oil investigation it was disclosed that he had carried the little brown satchel containing $100,000 to Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall. He was indicted, but on motion of the Government's own counsel the indictments were eventually dismissed.

For a time young Doheny lived in this city at No. 15 East Eighty-fourth street. He sold that home about a year ago, however, after he had left it unoccupied for two or three years.

Taking Over Management.

He was making his home and business headquarters in Los Angeles. He was interested in mining properties, theaters on the West Coast and ranches. He had been steadily taking over the business responsibilities of his father and would soon have been in complete control of the vast interests of the elderly Doheny.

The Doheny fortune was wrested from the earth by the father of the slain man only after twenty years of literally picking his way through mountains, boring waste places and sifting sands of hundreds of miles of desert. He was a prospertor of the old type, packing out on venture after venture for twenty years with a little suck now and then, and finally hitting fortune that ran into the first million. That came when he sold a big claim to the Santa Fe Railroad for $1,400,000.

After the war, through the oil investigations and since that time the younger Doheny has been almost constantly at his father's side. He was described tonight as a quiet man, who was taking responsibilities from his father as fast as the elder man would permit him.

Fall Voices Sorrow.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 17 (U.P.).—The killing of Edward L. Doheny, jr., in Los Angeles today saddened the household of former Interior Secretary Albert B. Fall, who was linked with the elder Doheny in the Teapot Dome scandal.

"That's terrible," said Mrs. Fall, when informed of the murder. "Junior was such a splendid young man."

The Falls and Dohenys have been intimate friends since the elder Doheny and the former Secretary prospected together 50 years ago.

MEN AND 2 WOMEN INJURED IN CRASHES

2 of Former Believed Dying; Hit-and-Run Driver Sought; Victims' Auto Upset.

STRONG LIGHTS BLAMED

Blinding lights and a hit-and-run driver caused probably fatal injuries to two men and the serious injury of another man, a girl and an elderly woman on highroads near Washington early last night.

Recovery of Charles Ward, 19 years old, of 223 F street southeast, and Peter F. Hull, 68, of 424 North Tenth street, Alexandria, Va., who were rushed to the Casualty Hospital after the accident, was reported to be unlikely. Ward received a fractured skull, while Hull was suffering from a broken neck and internal injuries.

T. W. Magrogan, 24, of the Sanitary Grocery Company at Fourth and H streets northwest, who received severe lacerations about the face and arms, is expected to recover.

Beulah Topley, 19, of 143 Melwood avenue, Cherrydale, Va., received a fractured collar bone and internal injuries. Her condition was reported to be encouraging, considering the severity of her injuries.

Mrs. Alice Hull, 61 years old, was reported to have received a severe injury over the left eye, and to be suffering from shock.

Mr. and Mrs. Hull were the victims of a hit-and-run driver at Silver Hill, Va. Blinded by powerful headlights, Hull lost control of his car, resulting in the machine being struck with terrific force by the approaching one and turned over, according to police.

Magrogan, driving a car occupied by Ward and Miss Topley, was dazzled by the undimmed lights of a rapidly moving automobile at T. B., Md., he told police. He said that he was forced off the road and that his car struck a tree.

Working on meager clews, police were endeavoring to trace the drivers of the two cars responsible for the accidents. Dr. Louis Jimal attended to all the injured. Both accidents occurred between 7 and 7:30 o'clock last night.

Bolivia Patrols Enter Paraguay, Say Reports

Asuncion, Paraguay Feb. 17 (AP.).—Dispatches received from the Chaco district, where clashes between Paraguayan and Bolivian troops a few months ago threatened to result in warfare, indicate that Bolivian patrols again are making frequent incursions into the disputed territory. It is believed at Paraguayan rear guard forts that new clashes may result.

The Paraguayan Charge d'Affaires at Washington Saturday informed the State Department that there was danger of "a new eminent conflict" between Bolivian and Paraguayan troops in the disputed territory. Indians were reported retreating before invading troops.

$50,000 Asked by Girl Suing Tamale Vender

Amarillo, Tex., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Habib Kahn, who claims to be an Afghan prince, but whom Amarillo residents know as a vender of "hot tamales," was named in a $50,000 breach of promise suit filed here yesterday by Miss Imogene Smith, daughter of a Greer County, Okla., farmer.

Miss Smith alleges in the petition that Kahn called off his betrothal with her after a trousseau had been obtained, at his expense, and after they had been photographed for their passports for Afghanistan.

Earl of Clancarty, 60, Irish Sportsman, Dies

London, Feb. 17 (A.P.).—The Earl of Clancarty died today, aged 60. He held extensive estates in Ireland and was well known as a sportsman.

His first marriage in 1889 with Belle Billon, a vaudeville star, created something of a sensation. She died in 1907 and a year later the earl married Mary Gwatkin Ellis, daughter of a barrister. His son, Lord Kilconnell, succeeds to the title which was created in 1803.

MASSACRE OF SEVEN IS LAID TO RUM TRADE

International Traffic Is Held Responsible in Slaying of Chicago Gang.

DETROIT MEN SUSPECTED

Chicago, Feb. 17 (A.P.).—International liquor traffic, in the opinion of Chicago prosecutors, holds the secret of the St. Valentine's day massacre of seven Chicago gangsters.

This theory stood out most prominently today as officers continued a fruitless search for the killers in the belief that the massacre was the culminating act of a series of bombings and hijackings in a liquor war between Canadian sporting syndicates that had the wholesale market of Chicago as its prize.

"We are looking to Detroit for solution of the seven George Moran gang murders," one of the prosecutors said, following a secret conference with Detroit policemen, adding that arrests were expected momentarily.

Photographs of sixteen members of the "purple gang" of Detroit were in possession of Chicago police, but David Stotesbury, assistant State's attorney, said none had been identified by witnesses who saw the slayers flee from the North Clark street garage, where the killings took place.

Three members of this gang, believed by police to have rented rooms opposite the garage to act as lookouts awaiting a favorable moment to order out the firing squad that shot the Moran men down, were being sought.

Moran himself, however, sent word to Chief of Detectives Egan that he did not know and could not guess the identity of the killers.

"We don't know what brought it on," Moran was quoted as saying. "We're facing an enemy in the dark."

Moran, some investigators believe, is still alive today only because of a mistake in identification made by the lookouts in the rooms opposite the garage. Their theory is that the lookouts mistook Al Weinshank—one of the seven victims—for Moran. Weinshank, it was pointed out, was of the same build and general appearance as his chief, dressed much the same.

While search for the slayers went on, the police, admonished by the State's attorney that they must "clamp on the lid" or go to jail raided gangster haunts, disorderly places, beer flats and speak-easies in various parts of the city, making numerous arrests. None of them, however, served to clear up the shootings.

Fingerprints found in the rooming house opposite the garage, and believed to have been made by the "spotters," were wired to Detroit, New York and other cities today. No record of them was found in the Chicago bureau of identification.

Checks Forged by Son To Wed, Says Mother

Westville, N. J., Feb. 17 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Charged with forging twelve checks in the last two weeks on his mother's bank account to finance his coming wedding, Joseph Riley, jr., 19, was released in $500 bail following a hearing before Recorder Simmler yesterday. His father furnished the bail. His mother assured the recorder that the checks would be made good.

Young Riley admitted he had put his mother's name to the checks, totaling $86, but he maintained silence about his marriage plans and refused to reveal the name of his wife to be or the date of the wedding. The youth's father notified the police when the first forged check appeared, never suspecting his son.

Slayer of Two Asks Police Lodging; Held

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Feb. 17 (U.P.).—Theodore Fedevich shot and killed two persons today after a family quarrel, and was arrested when he applied at a police station for lodging. The victims were Mrs. Caroline Bidron, Fedevich's sister-in-law, and her 20-year-old son, John.

Fedevich and his son, Joseph, came to Wilkes-Barre from East Pittsburgh to effect a reconciliation with Mrs. Fedevich, who had left her husband several weeks ago. Mrs. Bidron opposed the reconciliation.

4, Failing to Find Miracle Light, Killed at Crossing

Returning From Church When Freight Train Hits Auto, Knocking It Into River; Driver Escapes; Firemen Called to Reach Bodies.

Woodbridge, N. J., Feb. 17 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Returning from a visit to St. Anne's Church in Keansburg, N. J., where they had noped to see a miraculous light recently reported to have appeared from time to time, four members of a family were killed at 1 o'clock this morning in a grade-crossing accident here. Another member of the family was seriously injured.

The dead are: Andrew Barcia, 56, of Lodi, N. J.; his wife, Katherine, 50, and daughter, Angelina, 24, and another daughter, Mrs. Frances Plescia, 31, also of Lodi. Joseph Plescia, husband of Frances, is in the Passaic General Hospital.

Joseph Plescia, the driver of the car, stopped at the Lodi crossing of the Bergen County short cut on the Erie Railroad on the way home from the church at Keansburg to wait for the passing of an eastbound freight. There are no gates at the crossing, warning being given by blinker lights.

When the eastbound freight cleared the crossing, the driver started across the tracks and failed to see westbound fast freight No. 77 bearing down on him. He had almost cleared when the freight struck the car. It was carried several hundred feet along the side of a steep embankment until it plunged down into the Saddle River.

The car sank, but was not quite covered. Plescia managed to get out and staggered to the bank. He was found unconscious when Fire Chief Otto Zimmerly and his engine company arrived on a call from the train crew. It was 20 minutes before the others were taken from the car and they were dead.

The train was in charge of Conductor J. J. Marsh and the engineer was M. Pierson.

RIVER YIELDS BODY IN DEATH MYSTERY

Miss Vernan Klink's Corpse Found, Brings Slaying Trial for Harry Bowman.

HARRISBURG MAN IN JAIL

Harrisburg, Pa., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—The 23-day search for Miss Verna Klink, 31-year-old candy store manager, who had been missing since January 25, ended today when her body was found in the Susquehanna River 3 mile below this city. The body, caught on a rock about 35 feet from the shore, was discovered by Michael Krzyzosiak, of Steelton, and an autopsy was held.

Upon the result of this autopsy, District Attorney Robert T. Fox said tonight, will rest the decision as to whether Harry B. Bowman, perfume salesman, held in the Dauphin County Jail, will be formally charged with the woman's murder.

While no official statement regarding the autopsy was issued tonight, it was learned on reliable authority that the woman's head was severely bruised and that water had been found in the lungs. The nature of the bruises, physicians declared, indicated that they had been suffered before the woman drowned.

An almost continuous search has been in progress since January 25, the night upon which Miss Klink disappeared. Yesterday, however, the hunt was officially terminated, until the ice broke up to permit a more intensive search.

Alleges Suicide Pact.

Bowman was arrested January 28 in connection with the case. After eighteen hours of grilling, he is alleged to have confessed to police that he robbed the woman of $900.

His story of the affair, however, involved a suicide pact entered into by Miss Klink and himself. He said they both jumped into the river, but he pulled himself out while she went to her death.

This explanation is doubted by the police, who are of the opinion that Bowman, who is 39 years old and married, killed the woman before casting her body into the Susquehanna at a point near the main business district of Harrisburg. The condition of the body was good, with only a few cuts and bruises upon it. It still was clad in the raincoat the woman wore when she disappeared.

With Bowman in jail is Miss Ethel Miller, his alleged sweetheart, on whom he is suspected of showering gifts bought with the money Miss Klink's mother had given her daughter to purchase the store of which she was manager.

In River, Quoted as Saying.

The day after his arrest Bowman broke under grilling and said, "You'll find her body the river. I got wet, too."

According to police, Bowman met Miss Klink after working hours late on the night of January 25. He had told her, they say, that he would provide the extra amount of money needed by her to buy the store. She had $900 when she left the store in company with him, the last time she was seen alive.

When Bowman was arrested he had $450 in his possession. This, police say, was a part of the money he had taken from the woman. Miss Miller, who was arrested at the same time, had $300 sewed in the lining of her coat.

Police discount entirely Bowman's story of a suicide pact. Their theory is that Bowman deliberately killed the woman and attempted to conceal the deed by disposing of her body in the river.

Kidnap Suspect Admits He Gave Candy to Girl

San Francisco, Calif., Feb. 17 (U.P.) A man who admitted he was the "tall, dark, middle-aged stranger" who fed candy to 4-year-old Doris Virginia Murphy, believed a kidnaping victim, was held for questioning by police here tonight. The suspect is John Williams, 50, for 19 years an employe of the United States Mint.

Williams denied all knowledge of the child's disappearance from a public playground late yesterday, police said, although he admitted purchasing candy for Doris and another girl.

P. C. Hanna, 72, Dies; Long U. S. Consul

Retired Official Had Close View of Revolutions in His Career.

San Diego, Calif., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Philip C. Hanna, retired ranking consul general of the United States, died at a sanitarium here today. He had been in poor health since November, when he suffered a stroke of paralysis at his home in Waterloo, Iowa. He was 72 years old.

Mr. Hanna entered the United States consular service in 1891. During his foreign service he passed through three South American revolutions and became conspicuous when on several occasions he was backed by the United States Navy in efforts to protect American interests. The Venezuelan government during the time of the Crespo revolution asked the United States to recall him. Secretary Blaine replied that Mr. Hanna's work was satisfactory and that he would remain until the close of the outbreak.

His work that followed the Monterey and New Mexico flood disasters of 1909 won him the thanks of President Taft and the Mexican Red Cross.

After the landing of United States troops at Vera Cruz in 1914 he was made a prisoner of war by Huertaistas.

EDWARD KING, HOUSE MEMBER, DEAD HERE

Illinois Representative Is Stricken After Illness Lasting Two Weeks.

FUNERAL IN GALESBURG

Stricken with a fatal attack after an illness of two weeks, Representative Edward J. King, of Galesburg, Ill., 61 years old, died here at 2:30 o'clock yesterday morning.

Accompanied by the widow, Mrs Marguerita M. King, the remains were taken to Galesburg yesterday afternoon for funeral services tomorrow afternoon. A delegation of Illinois representatives will follow today to attend the final rites.

Representative King had been in ill health for several months, but his condition did not occasion any alarm until about two weeks ago, when he was forced to remain at home. His recovery was hoped for until yesterday, when he suffered a sudden relapse.

Representative King was reelected to the Seventy-first Congress last fall. He had served in the House since the Sixty-fourth Congress in 1915. Though he did not take a spectacular part in the recent sessions of the House, Representative King was able to attend to his congressional duties and serve the requests of his constituents.

Born in Springfield, Mass., Representative King graduated from the Galesburg High School and from Knox College. He was admitted to the bar and became city attorney of Galesburg, in which office he served until he entered the Illinois State Legislature. He was then elected to the Sixty-fourth Congress and reelected up until the Seventy-first.

Representative King's first wife, formerly Miss May B. Roberts, of Galesburg, died in 1925. The Galesburg representative married again two years ago, making Miss Marguerita M. Hodgson, of Ontario, Canada, his bride. A son, Dr. Ivan King, of Chicago, from the first marriage, survives him besides the widow. Representative King will be buried at the side of his first wife in the Hope Abbey in Linwood Cemetery, Galesburg.

News of Representative King's death was dispatched to the Capitol early yesterday morning and flags were lowered to half mast over the House and Senate. Many of the Illinois delegates, however, were away from their homes during the day and they were not notified of their fellow member's passing until late last night.

The widow was at Representative King's bedside when he died. They lived in the Corcoran Apartments.

MAJ. SPATZ LAUDS REFUELING BENEFITS

Report to Air Corps Chief Declares That Tests Prove Many Advantages.

WILL HELP SPEED MAILS

The refueling of airplanes, while in flight is not only safe and practicable, but of distinct advantage in military operations and of equal importance in commercial flying.

This is the judgment of Maj. Carl Spatz, commanding officer of the recent refueling flight of the Question Mark, in a report to Maj. Gen. James E. Fechet, Chief of the Air Corps.

Maj. Spatz points out that the refueling operations carried on with the Question Mark were accomplished under virtually every meteorological condition. Many contacts were made at night without any difficulty whatever.

All personnel connected with the experimental flight, he says, are convinced that refueling can be applied successfully to pursuit, attack and observation aircraft, and will enable bombing aircraft to take off with heavier bomb loads and proportionally less fuel, thus largely increasing their cruising radius and efficiency as military weapons.

Discussing the application of refueling to commercial planes, Maj. Spatz says: "Refueling has a distant application to commercial flying. The greatest hazard in the operation of commercial aircraft comes from taking off heavily loaded transport planes from small soft ground airdromes. Obviously these planes have to carry enough gasoline to reach their destination or are required to land frequently for fuel. The take-off from small fields can be obviated or at least made much safer by carrying on the take-off very light gas loads and refueling in flight.

"The experiments in connection with the Question Mark undoubtedly presage transcontinental and transoceanic flights without landing. Under present conditions at least one-half hour is lost in landing, taking on fuel and take-off. By refueling in flight this half hour for each stop can be entirely eliminated, since the commercial plane can proceed on its route as it is refueled.

"The transfer of mails across the continent can now be speeded up at least six hours by refueling in flight.

"Refueling makes for greater safety in flying in unfavorable weather. In both military and commercial flying pilots are quite frequently required to attempt flights in unfavorable weather, due to lack of sufficient gasoline to go around or over local storms. When refueling has been developed to a point where refueling planes are located at frequent intervals throughout the country and when radio is carried by transport planes it will be possible to fly around bad weather conditions and ask for fuel in flight."

HOOVER GIVEN LEADERSHIP IN ARMS PARLEY MATTERS

now being gradually completed, admittedly has no point and would only tend to dissipate the chance of possible success later on.

Representatives of the various interested powers, including the United States, are to meet at Geneva in April with a view to reaching, if possible, a practical basis for future discussion. This conference, held under the auspices of the preparatory commission of the League of Nations, may be infinitely more important in its practical results than a dozen conferences held before the powers are in agreement as to a mutually acceptable groundwork for deliberation.

Yet the tendency among internationalists is to ignore the Geneva meeting and assume that if only the powers could be brought together by force, the miracle of a solution would at once appear.

Easy to Obtain Conference.

It would require no force nor any great amount of diplomatic pressure to bring the powers together in conference if such a move promised results.

Any one of the five powers signing the Washington conference treaty—Great Britain the United States France, Japan or Italy—could, automatically bring about a conference tomorrow by the simple process of requesting it under Article XXI of the Washington treaty, which reads as follows:

"If during the term of the present treaty the requirements of the national security of any contracting power in respect of naval defense are, in the opinion of that power, materially affected by any change of circumstances, the contracting powers will, at the request of such power, meet in conference with a view to the reconsideration of the provisions of the treaty and its amendment by mutual agreement."

President Coolidge has had the power to practically compel the nations to meet in conference any time the President desired.

It would have been elementary to demonstrate that America's security has been affected by the change of circumstances resulting from the British and Japanese building programs since the treaty went into effect. America's judgment on that point would have sufficed under the terms of the treaty as will be noted by the wording of Article XXI. The other powers would have no choice but to meet in conference in response to the request of the United States.

Similar Situation Coming.

The same situation will exist when Mr. Hoover becomes President. No difficulty whatever is anticipated in bringing about an international conference on naval limitation, although there might be an implied treaty violation to arrange for a conference between some of the interested powers and leave the others out.

The reason on such move is made is because it is apparent that no results can be expected until an agreement on basic matters is assured between Great Britain and the United States.

Effort along that line was made at the Geneva naval conference and failed. France and Italy declined to participate in that conference because they foresaw the certainty of failure.

President Coolidge could have based his invitation on Article XXI and thereby been assured of French and Italian participation, but he did not do so and events indicate that this was a wise move. There was, it is pointed out, a mere possibility of agreement on basic principles between Great Britain and the United States and the risk was taken at Geneva to test this meager chance.

The test showed conclusively that no agreement could be reached unless America chose to sacrifice her national security for the sake of a paper pact, giving Britain the advantages which the British government and the British people have insisted upon for their own ends.

British to Stand Pat.

If the British at Geneva had simply sought to outwit the United States or obtain some advantage over America, the outlook for the next few years would be far brighter than it now is with respect to naval limitation.

It might well be assumed, it is explained, that the British would change their tactics after discovering that Uncle Sam was not to be hoodwinked. But apparently the British at Geneva thought of their own needs, their own century-old existence upon real protection for her food supplies and her safety.

There is no thought of a different British view at the next conference and unless America is willing to build up to British requirements there can be no rational discussion of parity on the basis of what the United States thinks should be the maximum measurement of naval defense.

Among the most absurd current notions in the United States, diplomats explain, is that which pictures the British people as likely to curb the admiralty and compel it to say British naval policy in order to American public opinion. There record within the last half century of the people of Great Britain even making a gesture toward interfering with the admiralty program of British naval defense.

The last British program of increases came under the Labor government, which has caused comment in Congress here on the theory that the Labor government had in some way disregarded its principles in authorizing the naval increase. The real point was that neither a Labor government nor a Tory government nor a Liberal government has anything to do with British determination to maintain her sea power and to rely upon the admiralty for telling her how it is to be done.

field. Another rush occurred when Col. Lindbergh was finally located.

The usual snapping of cameras took place when he had finally taxied to a place near the "line," and Col. Lindbergh indulged in a little sound advice to the news camera men. He repeated his fear of injuring some one with his propeller and suggested that if the camera men, who invariably recognize him, would refrain from rushing in his direction the crowd would be easier to manage.

In an interview at the quarters of Capt. Harry A. Dinger, officer of the day, who drove out to his plane in an automobile and drove him off the muddy field, Col. Lindbergh refused to discuss his coming marriage with Miss Anne Spencer Morrow, daughter of the Ambassador to Mexico. He also replied to a question regarding rumors that he is to have an air secretaryship in the Hoover Cabinet that "there is no authority" for statements to that effect.

Will Go to New York.

From Washington, he said, he is going to New York, probably today. From there, he expects to start shortly on a tour of the route covered by the Transcontinental Air Transport, in which he holds a technical position.

In explaining his forced landing at Hatteras Inlet, and this following the coast line from Charleston instead of flying in a direct line, he said that he was endeavoring to find clear weather. Sometimes, he said, when fog is heavy inland it will be found light or absent along the coast, and vice versa. He had flown inland and along shore at intervals, he said, finding the fog very heavy at all points.

after a tour of the continent. Wallace, whom Rogers described as "a serious youth, alternately in high spirits and in melancholy mood," had been interested in economics, the father said, and had written a number of economic tracts, nine of which had been published.

Some time ago he obtained a position as a proofreader with a publishing house, but resigned after four months because of poor health. Subsequently he had gone to work for a wood-cutting firm in Greenwich Village, in the hope that the work would benefit him.

About two years ago Rogers, the two sons and their mother, Lola, who is in California, made a trip to Alaska.

trict Commissioners and not the President were largely responsible for existing conditions.

"Who appoints the Commissioners?" Howard promptly asked.

The woman made an effort to elaborate on her thought, but was interrupted by Howard.

"Don't make a speech, madam; don't make a speech. Answer my question."

Although sitting down front, her voice did not carry well and before she could make herself heard a man's voice boomed from the other side of the house.

"I hold that the President appoints the Commissioners, and therefore is responsible for their acts," this voice asserted rather pompously. The audience applauded, and Howard announced that the resolution had carried with one dissenting vote. He added that the woman was entitled to her view but that he joined with the man who put the responsibility on the President.

Reads Specimen Report.

Prefacing his report on the places in which liquors can be bought, Howard read from a specimen report which he said was turned in by an operative of the committee. It read:

"No. 247. Entered — E street northwest. Cigar store; 12:15 p. m.;—purchased five drinks of gin, 25 cents per drink, sold in back room with sign 'no admittance' on door. Time, 20 minutes."

The number given referred to the number of the report and not the E street address. In a long list of "places where liquors are sold" Howard named only the streets, and not addresses. These, with the number of places where liquors allegedly can be obtained, were given as: Pennsylvania avenue, 39 places; First street northwest, 3; Second street northwest, 5; Third street northwest, 2; Fourth street northwest, 2; Four-and-a-half street northwest, 26; Fifth street northwest, 6; Sixth street northwest, 3; Seventh street northwest, 12; Eighth street northwest, 23; Ninth street northwest, 46; Tenth street northwest, 8; Eleventh street northwest, 1; Twelfth street northwest, 6; Thirteenth street northwest, 8; Fourteenth street northwest, 38; Fifteenth street northwest, 3; Eighteenth street northwest, 1; B street northwest, 2; C street northwest, 1; D street northwest, 9; E street northwest, 9; F street northwest, 11; G street northwest, 14; H street northwest, 11; I street northwest, 3; K street northwest, 2; L street northwest, 2; N street northwest, 3; P street northwest, 8; T street northwest, 3; U street northwest, 7; Florida avenue, 8; Massachusetts avenue northwest, 2; Minnesota avenue northeast, 1; Missouri avenue, 1; New Jersey avenue, 1; New York avenue northwest, 6; De Sales street, 1; East Capitol street, 1; and Irving street northwest, 4.

"Our appeal is to the President, the Congress, the pastors and the people of Washington," Howard said.

Points to Press Attacks.

"You will soon be host to 100,000 or more citizens from all over the Nation The impression which they will carry away will not be limited to the Capitol, the Library, the Monument, the Lincoln Memorial and the White House the mountain peaks of the Capital City.

"The press of the Nation has been carrying the story of Washington's shame—its gamblers' benefit, its police scandal, its disregard for law and the charges made on the floor of House and Senate of the vice and graft conditions which prevail in the people's Capital.

"The Capital City is seething in lawlessness and saturated with poison liquor, dispensed by bootleggers under various aliases.

"Bills for new laws and additional appropriations are now pending and should be passed. For the rest—we await the arrival of Herbert Hoover."

William D. Upshaw, former representative from Georgia and ardent dry, attended the meeting.

pack mules related today they were unable to get their animals through rugged Animas Canyon, where the slides have occurred. The canyon is very narrow, with perpendicular walls reaching several thousand feet high. The workers reported the snowslides had blocked a river in the canyon. Backing the water up over the railroad tracks, it also was found that for a distance of about 2 miles in the canyon powdered snow had drifted. The snow was so fine that it was difficult to travel over, even with close woven webs.

Working in the canyon was described as dangerous today because many slides may yet come down without warning. Watchmen have been stationed at vantage points in the mountains where they can keep a sharp lookout of the whole area and warn the workers if other avalanches begin to roll down. With the coming of warmer weather it is believed other slides will occur, but railroad officials do not expect they will be great enough to cause another blockade.

MODIFICATION URGED BY CHURCH SOCIETY

Unofficial Episcopal Body Sees Volstead Act Void Wherever Opposed.

RICH VIOLATORS SCORED

New York, Feb. 17 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Asserting that 1,500 Protestant Episcopal clergymen have offered to cooperate in a move for practical temperance, and that it represents the majority opinion of the Episcopal Church, the Church Temperance Society of the church tonight reopened its campaign for the modification of the Volstead law. The society declared in a statement that the sole accomplishments of prohibition have been to substitute the "speakeasies" for the saloon, and poison for alcohol.

Going beyond its stand last May, when Bishop Manning and many clergymen challenged its right to speak for the Episcopal Church, the society declares that if modification of the Volstead law is not enough to bring temperance it will ultimately be necessary to amend the eighteenth amendment so as to permit the introduction of the Canadian system of liquor control in those States which desire it. The statement adds:

"While there are different points of view on certain theoretical aspects of the problem, such as the relative moral value of temperance achieved by education or total compulsory abstinence, on the following practical questions the majority are agreed:

"1. That the Volstead act is not an honest or a scientific attempt to define an intoxicant.

"2. That the prohibition laws can not be enforced in the States where a majority or even a large influential minority of public opinion opposes it., without resorting to methods of the most extreme oppression and cruelty.

"3. That whether or not it may be justifiable to disobey a law believed to be unjust while doing everything possible to have the unjust law repealed, there can be no excuse for the complacent violation of the law by millions of people who are too indifferent to make any attempt to change it. We especially condemn the selfishness of the wealthy violators, who give neither time nor money to change the law they spend fantastic sums to break.

4. There are only two honorable courses open to us: Either modify the law or squarely face the sacrifices of its enforcement. The third course is the policy we, as a Nation, are pursuing, namely, to keep the law regardless of whether it is enforced or not. This is the policy of nullification."

petuated through this great university.

"The courses will be established and maintained with the object of training and instructing those availing themselves of its benefits in the art of public speaking and oratory in its various branches, in all of which my husband, in whose memory this gift is made, was, during his long, eventful and useful life, the most eminent of his time."

Full Political Course.

The new department will be developed in connection with the new school of government, established last fall under the terms of a $1,000,000 endowment given by the supreme council of the Scottish Rite of the Southern jurisdiction, and will enable the university to offer complete training for work of a governmental, civic or professional nature, university authorities stated. Eventually it is believed that a separate school of public speaking will be organized.

Courses will be offered both during the day, for regular students, and also in the evening, for those who are taking college work while holding Government and other positions. Special classes will be formed for business and professional men and Government officials.

"The art of forceful and interesting public speaking is one of the most necessary things for men and women who expect to enter public or professional life to know," Dr. Marvin said. "A large proportion of the students of George Washington University, as well as from other educational institutions here, are engaged in work for the Government, or expect to undertake careers of a public or civic nature upon graduation. For this reason I believe that Mrs. Depew's gift will have a far-reaching effect in helping to produce more efficient and better-trained men and women for public service."

Mrs. Depew Resides Here.

Mrs. Depew has recently become a resident of Washington, having recently bought the house at 2107 Massachusetts avenue, now occupied by Undersecretary of State Ogden L. Mills. It is believed that she will take an active interest in shaping the formation of the new courses to train students and those already prominent in Government, civic and business life in the principles of public speaking which made her late husband internationally famous for his addresses.

The gift of Mrs. Depew is one of the larger of a dozen contributions which have increased the endowment and income of the university nearly $2,000,000 in the last year.

The late Senator Depew died on April 5, 1928, in his ninety-fourth year. He was probably the most noted orator of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, and had the reputation of making more famous addresses than any man of his time. Several times he refused offers of some of the highest offices in the power of the people and the President to bestow. He was appointed and confirmed by the Senate as Ambassador from the United States to Japan, but declined. He refused the offer to be Secretary of State in President Benjamin Harrison's Cabinet, and refused to run unopposed for reelection after two terms in the United States Senate. He was probably best known as president and chairman of the boards of directors of some of the largest railroads and other corporations in the United States.

THE PROHIBITION LAW.

Senator Reed, of Missouri, tells the truth in declaring that the prohibition law is not only not enforced, but is made the means of hypocrisy, crime, corruption, graft, demoralization of justice, and fraud upon both Government and people. Powerful as is Senator Reed's arraignment of the hypocrites and criminals who take advantage of the prohibition amendment and the Volstead law, he could have made it more powerful and still remained within the bounds of truth. But even if he should publish the names of all members of Congress who support the prohibition law and then violate it, and should expose every official who makes dishonest money out of the present blundering attempt to suppress the liquor traffic, the fact would remain that the American people have outlawed the traffic and are supporting efforts to make their will effective.

If any improvement is to be made in existing conditions, it does not lie in increasing the penalties for infractions of the law. Senator Jones' bill, if enacted, will only make matters worse, by stimulating perjury and violence on the part of prohibition violators. If he should prescribe death as the penalty of every infraction of the Volstead act, it would still be violated, but in the violation there would be a train of perjury, murder and gangster terrorism following the violations.

The fundamental fault lies in the mistake made by the people when they transferred the police power of the States to the Federal Government. Prohibition or regulation of the liquor traffic is essentially an exercise of police power. The United States Government is not organized in such fashion as to make it possible for it to exercise the police power effectively. Its attempt to do so within the States stirs up a hellbroth of confusion and corruption. The more actively the Government interferes, and the more severe the penalties it imposes, the greater is the resistance and the more habitual is the corruption of Government agents.

If the people should conclude that highway traffic had passed beyond the control of the States, and should empower the Federal Government to regulate it, a situation would arise similar to the attempt to stamp out the liquor traffic. Federal agents would have to be stationed at every crossroads, Federal traffic courts would be set up, millions would be expended, and yet the public would violate the traffic laws, corrupt traffic officials, and find sympathy and support in all State officials.

Wherever public opinion favors liquor prohibition the law can be made effective, but where public opinion opposes prohibition it is not in the power of the United States Government to enforce the law. In other words, where the State exercises its police power the law is enforced; and where the State refuses to exercise its power, the Federal Government cannot enforce the law. It is not a question of money, men, or severe penalties. It is a question of attempting to use a government controlled by the people to enforce a law that is opposed by the people.

Two other constitutional amendments are opposed by the people of certain States. The whole Nation tacitly accepts this situation and very sensibly refuses to attempt to use the power of the Government to enforce the amendments in those States. That is what must happen in regard to the prohibition amendment if it is not repealed. In the States which oppose prohibition there will be an abandonment by the Federal Government of its attempt to enforce the law.

When the United States Government bars out foreign liquor and prevents its transportation between the States it has done its full duty. The authority to enforce the law within the States rightfully belongs to the States. When the Federal Government enters a State and tries to exercise the police power it creates the situation that now exists.

A CONSTITUTIONAL DUTY.

When the House passed the reapportionment bill its action was hailed as a victory for constitutional government. In previous sessions the measure had met defeat at the hands of those whose delegations would lose strength as a result of reapportionment and those, principally the drys, who feared that reapportionment would increase the number of wets in Congress. Passage of the measure, therefore, reflected credit upon the House. It was believed generally that the Senate, which will not be affected by reapportionment, would concur in the action. The Senate, however, has failed to act.

On Thursday, Senator Vandenberg moved to take up the reapportionment bill. The motion was beaten by a vote of 48 to 23, party lines and lines of wets and drys being split. Time alone will tell whether or not the Senate intends to act upon reapportionment before the adjournment, but it is beginning to appear as though action may not be had.

It is a fundamentally important function of Congress to adjust the membership of the House according to the population. There has been made no reapportionment of seats in the House since 1910. In the meantime, population has increased and shifted until today millions of citizens are deprived of the representation to which they are entitled. True representative government today does not exist, and it will not exist until seats in the House are reapportioned.

DEADLY COMPETITION.

The statement that the automobile and the motor bus have "played hob" with the business of American railroads is not subject to dispute. Steadily of recent years automobile registration has increased and interurban bus lines have extended their routes. The average person still uses the railroad for his longer journeys, but the short trips that once were made upon a train are now made in the family automobile or a bus. The effect this has had upon the railroads of the Nation is made startlingly clear in an editorial in the Railway Age.

Total railway passenger traffic in 1928 amounted to 788,000,000 passengers and 31,635,000,000 passenger miles. These figures represent reductions below the peak year of 1920 of 38 and 33 per cent, respectively. "But these losses," says the Railway Age, "great as they are, fail to portray the gravity of the situation." The number of passengers carried in 1928 was smaller than in any year since 1905 and the number of passenger-miles was smaller than in any year since 1909. The Nation's railroads have fallen back 24 years in respect to the number of passengers carried, while in terms of passenger miles they face the situation that obtained 20 years ago.

In the meantime, population has been steadily increasing. From 1906 to 1928 population increased 40 per cent. Last year, however, the average American traveled but 264 miles on the steam lines, a decrease of 182 miles, or 41 per cent below the peak of 446 miles reached in 1919, and a lower annual average than in any years since 1903. In 1928 the average citizen made approximately six rail journeys. Passenger traffic statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission are available as far back as 1889, and in this entire period of 40 years there is no figure as small as the 1928 average. In connection with the number of railway trips made by each inhabitant of the United States the railroads are back to the traffic basis of more than 40 years ago.

"These facts," says the Railway Age, "warrant the most serious consideration in connection with demands which are made for increased passenger service and reduced freight rates and in connection with the public policy which is to control the development and operation of competing and subsidized forms of transportation." The railroads are the backbone of the transportation system and transportation is fundamentally important in the economic structure. The fact that the railroads are backsliding in respect to traffic carried, through no fault of their own but because of newly developed competition, is a matter of universal concern.

LAME DUCKS.

Senator Dill, of Washington, is not satisfied with the honor of fathering the queer little monstrosity known as the radio law. He yearns for greater fame. He offers a bill to prohibit lame duck members of Congress from taking Federal office within two years after their defeat at the polls. He thinks that legislators, after their defeat and during the few months they remain in Congress, would curry favor with an administration for the sake of getting a job at the end of their terms.

As Senator Dill has just been reelected for a term of six years, it can not be charged that he has any personal interest in his great measure. He merely seeks to promote the general welfare. The Constitution clearly contemplates the appointment of lame ducks to Federal jobs. It provides that "no senator or representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been encreased during such time." If this does not mean that a senator or representative can aspire to a Federal job there is no virtue in language and no virility in the Constitution.

Of course, it is understood that Senator Dill proposes to adorn the Constitution, not merely to obey it. He would improve it by making lame ducks ineligible to jobs for a term of two years after their defeat. Why he specifies 2 years, and not 33, the duration of the average generation, he does not condescend to explain. Is a lame duck dangerous for exactly two years to a day, after which he becomes not only innocuous, but actually eligible to assume official authority over his fellows?

Senator Dill would place all the blame upon a duck who has been defeated. But why not place part of the blame upon his constituents? They may be making a terrible blunder in not reelecting him; and many instances can be cited in which ducks, once badly lamed, have recovered and made glorious flights in statesmanship.

The country's annals are full of the achievements of lame ducks. Look at William J. Bryan, who accepted a place as Secretary of State; William H. Taft, who was appointed Chief Justice; Charles E. Hughes, Frank B. Kellogg, and scores of others.

The defeat of a man running for Congress may be the making of him and may place him in a position where he can give valuable service to his country. Certainly defeat is bad enough, without imposing a political disability that is not contemplated by the Constitution. It is a question whether Congress can deprive an American citizen of his chief perquisite, prerogative, and inherent right—the right conferred upon him by nature, and confirmed by the Constitution—the right to hold a Federal job, if he can get one.

If you would judge a country's form of government, observe whether it affords a good market for nostrums to remove fat.

ANTARCTIC WEATHER.

Sir George Hubert Wilkins' weather stations, which he plans to establish in twelve locations in Antarctica, may make possible practicable long-range weather forecasting. Meteorologists long have been of the opinion that conditions in the far South may have important bearing on weather throughout the world. As there never have been stations and observatories where data regarding Antarctic weather could be collected, the theory has yet to be proved.

Sir George has been in the Antarctic for three months. He is returning to the United States for a brief vacation, after which he will reestablish his headquarters at Deception Island and continue his aerial exploration of the vast unknown territory. In his comparatively brief stay in the far South he made valuable discoveries, and it is expected that his further explorations will yield much valuable information. The weather bureau project, however, is of far greater importance than the explorations.

The state of the weather has come to play a most important part in industry. California fruit shippers, for example, have found it necessary to anticipate so far as possible the weather that will obtain when a shipment of fruit reaches its destination, for investigation has proved that demand is influenced directly by the weather. Whole industries, such as the garment trades, are disrupted by an unusually cold or rainy spring, a short summer, or a warm winter. If the weather stations contemplated by Sir George Wilkins make possible accurate long-range weather forecasting, their economic value will be very far-reaching.

"NATIONAL ORIGIN."

Extract from address by Hon. David A. Reed, senator from Pennsylvania, before the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, January 30.

When we came to pass the immigration law, it was obvious that the total immigration that was to be permitted, which was about 160,000, had to be divided among different countries somehow. You could not just arbitrarily say to Great Britain, "You get ten thousand," and say to Germany, "You get ten thousand," and so on. The quotas would be too small for some countries and far too big for others. So a rule of thumb was adopted, temporarily and only temporarily, that we would base the quotas on the number of foreign-born people who were in the census of 1890.

That census is now 39 years old and, of course, it is claimed by these foreign folks that it is an artificial thing to go back to a 39-year-old census and that we ought to take the up-to-date census of 1920. But it never seems to occur to them or to any of the critics of the law that the great injustice of the whole business is to ignore all of us who were born here.

Now, surely we have got just as much right to be reflected in those quotas—we whose ancestors have been here for many generations back—as has the most recently arrived immigrant who is not naturalized and who does not even know what naturalization means.

For a permanent system we say that, if it is possible, we must take into account the whole population of this country and make your quotas as nearly like the composition of the Nation as it is possible for the scientists in the Census Bureau to make them.

We know how many people were here in 1790 because they took a census then; and that census had been studied with the greatest care by learned men for many years before immigration regulation came to be an acute question. As far back as 1910 an analysis was made officially by the Census Bureau of the composition of the population of 1790. We have had a census every ten years since and we have kept careful records of immigration for over a century. We have kept careful records of emigration (which has been comparatively small) for many years. We know as closely as we can know anything just how many people of each nationality here were here in any particular year since 1492, and it is perfectly easy for the scientists to calculate a factor of increase, as they call it.

Of course it can not be precise, but no method can be precise. Even this temporary basis I spoke of is hopelessly vague, because in 1890 there was not any Poland and there was not any Lithuania and there was not any Czechoslovakia or Jugoslavia; in 1890 the boundaries of Austria were vastly different, and the boundaries of Germany were vastly different. The boundaries of nearly every state in Europe that was in the last war were different then from what they are now; and it is a wild guess, at the best, when we try to say how many foreign born people came in 1890 from, let us say, Poland. Of course, it is a guess; any method is a guess. But the most undiscriminatory method that has been suggested is this one of taking the whole population. And it is the very essence and heart of the immigration law, in my judgment, that we keep it free of discrimination.

PRESS COMMENT.

His Mistake.

Atlanta Constitution: An alderman of Chicago has been arrested for stealing bread. He should have thrown a bomb and become a hero.

Isn't It?

Detroit News: It is good that Dr. Einstein didn't come out with his theory during a war. Some one would suspect it was signals.

Progress.

Florida Times-Union: Twenty-five years ago four men used to take four drinks, form a quartet, and warble "Sweet Adeline." Now two drinks make them think of that old favorite, "Shall We Gather at the River?"

Why Pick on England?

Detroit Free Press: Commenting on the prevalence of gambling among English women, a magazine article says: "There is not a friendly game of bridge in England." Why pick on England, particularly?

There Is No Difference.

Indianapolis Star: There seems to be little difference between what they sell out here as "Scotch" and what they peddle in Washington as "Embassy liquor."

Hurrah!

Boston Transcript: Congress has given its sanction to the construction of a bridge at Fort Kent, linking Maine and New Brunswick. Thus many Americans find another route out of Volsteadia into a happy land.

Poor Boys.

Cincinnati Enquirer: At the University of Pennsylvania athletes are to be allowed to participate in only two intercollegiate sports. After a while the poor boys will even begin to think they're going to school.

It's All the Same.

Houston Post-Dispatch: Barnett, the wealthy Creek Indian, says the woman proposed. But we don't believe that entitles him to a divorce. Whether a woman proposes or lets the man think he proposed it is all the same in the eyes of the law.

Too Much Tularemia.

Philadelphia Record: Health experts warn that tularemia, known as the rabbit disease, is communicable to human beings. Further research, we suspect, would reveal that it is epidemic among the voters in some communities which shall be nameless.

Meany!

Ohio State Journal: A fairly good way to tease an estimable neighbor woman, we discovered yesterday, is to remark in an off-hand manner, as she settles down to tell about her hospital experience, that in a number of cases lately surgical operations have been successfully resorted to to cure criminal tendencies.

What to Do?

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle: Something must be done about this new cult that insists that vegetables suffer when cooked. One writer is quoted as saying that "vegetables die in convulsions when the water boils." By and by they are going to argue that a square meal is a crime.

Another Law!

St. Louis Post-Dispatch: Oklahoma has a solution for a vicious practice, namely, the "whispering campaign," which was about as noiseless as thunder in the late presidential contest and plumbed more revolting depths in the election of 1920. Oklahome is going to pass a law forbidding the circulation of slanderous statements concerning candidates for office under penalty of fine or imprisonment or both.

A similar law was enacted long ago. It was written on stone in the handwriting of Omnipotence and proclaimed by Moses. That particular admonition is, we believe, observed by all decent people all the time. It procures obedience, not through fear of punishment, but by its essential righteousness.

Oklahoma apparently imagines that the statute is mightier than Sinai. That credulity might be called the great American illusion. And what a ride these illusionists are giving us!

Turkey-Trotzky.

New Orleans Times-Picayune: If Turkey, as reported, has agreed to grant asylum to Trotzky, the latter may soon be leading Kemal Pasha such a dance as is suggested by the Turkey-Trotzky combination.

Dictionary Humor.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch: The man who sets out to read the dictionary or encyclopedia may be a dull and plodding fellow, but his work is not without reward, as will appear presently. Hold your snickers. Gibe not at him. Ever since the gouty Dr. Johnson defined oats as what an Englishman feeds to his horse, a Scotchman to his children, there has been and will continue to be something to laugh at in the lexicons.

For example, this from the American article on Voltaire, one of the greatest wits of all time: "Voltaire also attempted comedy, but he seems to have been deficient in a sense of humor."

And, again, from the same source, in a different section: "Like chiropractic science—which was developed by non-scientific men until the scientific had to take it up and acknowledge its many virtues—phrenology contains truths that should not be overlooked."

An ass, Webster tells us, is a quadrupedal beast of burden, slow-moving and patient. Possibly sometimes asses contribute to learned publications.

The Old Clothes Center.

New York World: In these days when there is so much competition for international markets, it is pleasant to learn that Brooklyn has achieved a new economic eminence by displacing London as the old-clothes center of the world. Frequently we have wondered just what happened to the shiny serges sent out with the ashes. It is the guess of M. F. Christensen, head of the Bush Terminal disinfectant plant, that many of them are now outfitting Asia.

The old-clothes business, according to Mr. Christensen, is fast becoming an international business; it is no longer confined to dingy shops on the Bowery and the strong-armed suasion of "pullers-in." Oriental countries, which stubbornly blocked the infiltration of Occidental philosophies, now take kindly to American garments.

An old coat will fetch anywhere from 20 to 50 cents in Africa; a vest of pleasing design is worth all of a dime in Bombay; and Chinamen, who used to scorn European footwear, will bid a splendid sum for a pair of pants, depending upon the position and number of the tears in it. This is a factor in trade that the economists seem to have ignored, and we congratulate Brooklyn for its foresight.

Because Lying Is Natural to Man, Shall We Train Youth to Lie Well When Necessary?

By ROBERT QUILLEN

THE great problem before the people today is not prohibition, but war.

War is the problem most urgently in need of immediate solution, because nations have doubled their armament since the World War ended; the burden on taxpayers becomes ever greater; and new methods of destruction threaten men, women and children far removed from the "front" when the next war comes.

Defenders of war and of armament say preparedness is the one guarantee of peace—that nations must arm themselves solely as a measure of defense, and thus inspire a mutual fear that will discourage attack.

But the man who has prepared for any eventuality is willing to test the worth of his preparations; and the theory that a readiness to fight will prevent fighting has kept the world saturated with blood since the dawn of history.

Nations were superbly prepared for the last great war, and the graves of nine million slain afford mute testimony that their preparedness was no guarantee of peace.

Men say war is inevitable because it is man's nature to fight; and since war must come, it is the part of common sense to be ready for it.

But no voluntary act of man is inevitable, and such talk as this is an effort to blame Providence for man's perversity.

It is childish, illogical and dishonest talk.

If fighting is natural to man, so also is the lust of the flesh; and what is true of one is true of the other.

Men know themselves capable of lust, having inherited this passion from the primitive savage as they inherited a lust for battle.

But they do not make minute preparation for the exercise of lust in order to be ready for it when temptation overcomes them.

They do not fool themselves with the theory that lust can best be overcome by talking about it and refining methods for the exercise of it in the future.

They recognize it as something degrading and bestial, come down from the jungle, and they make rules to control man's sex nature and make it respectable.

Nature made conflict necessary, and men in a natural state compete for mates and food; but the abundance of civilization has changed the methods of conflict.

Modern man can satisfy his nature and have his triumphs without shedding blood.

To defend war because it is man's nature to fight is to defend rape, theft and assassination.

Man can overcome his beast nature when he will.

He can limit international conflict to courts as easily as he overcame promiscuous lust and substituted marriage.

War satisfies jungle instinct, but it is no more "necessary" than private murder is necessary.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

British Ambassador Explains.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I ask you to be so good as to print this letter in order to correct a misunderstanding?

In your leading article of this morning you say, "The British government, through its ambassador at Washington, intimates that it will soon initiate an effort to bring about an agreement by the principal naval powers for the further limitation of armaments."

I was recently asked my opinion with regard to cablegrams in the American press from London foreshadowing early resumption of negotiations for the further limitation of armaments. I authorized the publication yesterday of the written answer to this question which I had prepared but held pending the enactment of the naval construction bill so as to avoid any possible appearance of attempting to influence in any way the course of discussion on a matter which in England we hold to be purely an affair for the United States Government and Congress. This answer contained nothing to show that I was speaking on behalf of my government. I was, indeed, merely giving the personal opinion asked for, which was that the present situation warranted the assumption that some effort in this direction will be made before long, i. e., before the next Washington conference at any rate.

I regret that my omission to state specifically that, on this occasion as on many others, I was not speaking directly for my government should have led you into this misunderstanding.

ESME HOWARD.

British Embassy, Feb. 16.

Getting Rid of Primaries.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some of the State legislatures now in session are discussing the availability of abolishing the primary and going back to the old system of making nominations by conventions. This is a move in the direction of economy, and, at the same time, for getting better men to fill the various offices. The expense of making two campaigns, one for the nomination and one for the election, deters the best men from seeking office. The result is a more inefficient class get into public positions. It has reached the pass when it is the man who is most willing to spend money that gets nominated, even when good men are willing.

Nominating candidates by the primary system was a foolish move in the beginning, and its folly grows more and more apparent with each recurring election. It was a move to bring nominations more directly from the people, it was claimed, and the claim was without any foundation in fact, for, under the convention system, the people had the right to meet and select convention delegates to represent them. The result is the people are not as well served as they were before primaries were instituted, and the expense has enormously increased, while the doors to fraud are wide open.

ELMORE Z. WHITING.

Interesting But.

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle: Some French scientist have grown strawberries by electric light in half the time it takes to do this in the regular way. The cost was $5 per strawberry. This is interesting, but doesn't seem likely to afford much saving over present market costs.

What About Lindy?

Richmond Times-Democrat: Ask any man who the greatest fellow in the world is and he will tell you the Prince of Wales. This Albert Einstein is a creature only of theory. He never managed to fall from a horse every day of his life.

Speaking of Those Ever So Smart Tweed Ensembles and where they are found

Tweed ensembles have become an important part of every smart woman's wardrobe. There are two distinct types — the style appropriate for travel and country wear—and the casual-formal style for town.

Travel and Country Ensembles with a degree of that rugged look and that "air of knowing their way about the world"—these ensembles are of tweeds and basket weaves—often with jersey of wool and rayon. $39.50 to $69.60.

SPORTSWEAR, THIRD FLOOR

Casual-Formal Ensembles with the softer note, in "dressmaker" manner—these ensembles are of lightweight tweeds, basket weaves, covert cloth and Rodier's fabric, with printed frock, or blouse of "capucine" crepe—such as sketched, $85. Others, $65 upward.

THE WALNUT ROOM, THIRD FLOOR

The Hats to Wear With Them

are, in this instance, of felt—in these important styles. A new version of the Tricorne in tan felt has the air of "going somewhere"—the Reboux copy of "capucine" felt has the new long sides and may be smartly worn with the casual-formal ensemble, with its blouse in matching color. $15 upward.

U. S. JOINS ACCORD TO CURB DRUG SALE

14 Nations Reach Agreement and Plan Exchange of Data, Kellogg Announces.

AGENTS NAMED FOR WORK

(Associated Press.)

The conclusion of an informal agreement between the United States and thirteen other nations for closer cooperation among government officials charged with combating the traffic in narcotic drugs as an aid in curbing their international sale was announced yesterday by Secretary Kellogg.

At the insistence of the Treasury Department, which administers the American laws controlling narcotic drugs traffic, the Secretary of State took up with the principal European nations the question of stricter control of the illicit traffic.

It was suggested that the drug enforcement officials of the various nations arrange a direct exchange of information to include evidence with reference to persons engaged in the narcotics traffic, photographs, criminal records, fingerprints, Bertillon measurements, description of their methods of operating, places from which they have operated, the partners they have worked with and other useful data. These exchanges would be carried on by cable message and by mail and the cooperation would comprise detective work and investigation.

All of the countries approached with the proposal for the informal agreement acquiesced. They are Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Greece, Japan, Poland, Spain and Turkey. Each nation has designated an officer to work directly with Col. L. G Nutt, deputy commissioner in charge of narcotics of the Treasury Department here.

In commenting to the Belgian minister of justice on the proposed agreement, Attorney General Servais, at Brussels, said the agreement would be an effective means for suppression of the illicit drug traffic and to make effective in this field by official arrangement the system of international cooperation, which the Belgian government had already adopted without waiting for formal conventions, for the suppression of false coinage and the counterfeiting of bank notes.

This has resulted in the setting up at Brussels of a central office charged with all communications with foreign countries having for its purpose a general documentation of international culprits as well as the discovery of criminals. He favored the system as the most effective means of combating international delinquency.

'Twas about five years ago that "Rose Marie" first appeared on the other side of the footlights—and that night saw many an innovation in the musical comedy field. As a matter of fact, "Rose Marie" is not essentially musical comedy. It is more the musical play, but in its dance ensembles there are, or were, more clever ideas than the average musical comedy ever possessed. So that in the years following its debut almost every other show that came along copied from "Rose Marie." It had, too, one of the first big male choruses.

The 5-year old opus appeared again on the Avenue last night—in Mr. Poli's playhouse—and while the reception committee was not out in full force, there were enough of the Old Guard to give the venerable musical play a welcome home. While Atlantic City really saw the birth of "Rose Marie," Washington—and Poli's, at that—was the second home of what has proved to be a classic of the American theater.

Going back to see "Rose Marie" is like meeting up again with an old friend—a tried and true friend. Of the old work-a-day company only one remains—the handsome Charles Meakins, who plays the sergeant in charge of the Northwest Mounted. Five years on his head, and Charlie is as young as ever and plays, too, his role with the same verve and dash exercised on opening night, way back in 1924.

"Rose Maries" have come and gone, but none so lovely as the lady who now occupies the title role—Miss Virginia Fox. She has all the attributes: youth, beauty, vivacity, and she can sing and dance with the best of them; which is, after all, enough to fill the bill.

Lady Jane, the litle rough and tumble lass who tends bar in one of those whoopee joints up thar in the frozen North, is played rather cleverly by Peggy Pates, and her consort, in the Hard-Boiled Herman role, is Houston Richards, who was through here last year in the part.

Paul Doner sings the leading male role—unless Mr. Charles Meakins can be dismissed as a minor officer, which is doubtful—and this finds the part of Jim Kenyon in the hands of a rawboned engineer-miner type, which follows the pattern closely. Mira Nerska plays Wanda, the halfbreed who helps do all the dirty work.

By this time the fact must be pretty well established that "Indian Love Call," "Rose Marie," "Totem Tom Tom," and "Why Shouldnt We?' are the oustanding musical hits, and that the work of the chorines, at times, equals in interest that of the principals.

So long as the American theater lasts there will, in all probability, be "Rose Marie' companies trouping the country, like the "Uncle Tom" companies of old. And why not? Age sits rather well on the shoulders of "Rose Marie.' Like an old wine, if there is such a thing, it gets better with the seasons, or seems to, which amounts to the same thing.

BELASCO

No, No, Nanette," that sprightly comedy of married life demonstrated at the Belasco last night that its long run on Broadway was justified. Though most of its music is now familiar throughout the land and not a few of its jokes have by this time circulated even in the hinterland, it was received after the manner of a Washington premiere of those rare productions destined to big time success.

Led by Cecil Lean and Cleo Mayfield, of the original cast, the Savoy Musicomedians, under the direction of Charles Emerson Cook, handled the production to the taste of the most fastidious.

If there be any in this broad land who do not by this time know what the piece is all about, let it be said that it is based upon the conflict of emotions, intrigues and plans of two harassed husbands, one blessed with a wife who will not spend enough of her mate's ample income to keep herself in line with the titmes, and the other with a wife who keeps him constantly scratching to pay last summer's bills. And, of course, the production, being a musical comedy, all comes out well in the end.

Out of this melange comes the opportunity for several tunesome song hits and much entertaining clowning. Though the two headliners come from the original cast, enhanced with the aura of semidivinity which such antecedents always carry with them, they are hard pressed for their laurels by Virginia Marvin in the title role of Nanette, and Robert Capron, the impecunious lawyer who endeavors to straighten out the peculiar difficulties of his too wealthy friend, the later being Cecil Lean, alias Jimmy Smith.

The audience, belying the tradition that Washington audiences are of the cold and clammy variety, took to the production so enthusiastically that the last curtain did not fall until well past 11:30, at least half an hour beyond the orthodox hour for well behaved last curtains in this vicinity. It was the multitude of encores that was responsible for the delay, but it was a justifiable delay.

HOOVER DUE BACK TUESDAY WITH MANY TASKS UNFINISHED

less other appointments that he must make. He has definite views about the extra session of Congress, his greatly touted Prohibition Commission and about the tariff.

Much of this work has been finished and many of these conclusions have been reached down here—but just how ready he is to close the book of a President's prelnauguration work is not known.

Outwardly, Mr. Hoover has done very little here in the way of work. His known callers have been lacking in significance for the most part and his comings and goings have been similarly so. His dinner guests have been writers, aviators, men of science and others whom his biographers say he particularly likes to have around.

Objects to Publicity.

Politicians, the comparatively few who have been around at all, have been held to the mere payment of respects. Foreseeing that up and coming Southerners, who saw great opportunities in breaking away from the old political masters in the last campaign and did so, would come to harrass him, Horace Mann, the best opportunist of them all, and now an authority on Republican things South, was set up as a buffer. He stopped them on the Miami Beach side of the canal that protects Belle Isle.

But there is no telling what has gone on behind the scenes. Mr. Hoover is disposed against making public what he does and does not do, or what he plans to do until he himself wants it made public, and then he does it in his own way.

This is perhaps not so unusual as is his ability to keep any one from finding out his plans. And his associates are well trained to this end.

Some Callers Unseen.

There is every reason to believe that all of his callers are not known to the newspaper men who were required to keep their vigil a quarter of a mile from the house, and those callers of whom they have known have appeared to be unusually uncommunicative when they came out.

It is the general impression now that Claudius C. Huston, who is a close personal and political friend of Mr. Hoover, who is of Cabinet caliber, has either been in touch or been to see Mr. Hoover. Unless prophets are wrong, he will go in the Cabinet. At least, he has been about checking up on men who are under consideration, and has made a report since Mr. Hoover has been down here. But no information as to what he has done, whether he has seen Mr. Hoover or not, is available.

There was the instance, too, of the call one day of a group of State temperance leaders, to which attention was called at the time. The next day it was officially explained that they did not call as temperance workers, and that they simply paid their respects.

Interview Says Otherwise.

Yet a very reliable State newspaper carries an interview with the leader of the group, Don C. McCullough, State attorney for the Antisaloon League, telling how prohibition, both State and national, was discussed.

One of the first things, Mr. Hoover must take up after his arrival is the matter of the repeal of the national origins act. He wants it done. Senator Reed, of Pennsylvania, does not.

All work is to be done in his S street home, the preconvention place on Massachusetts avenue, the Mayflower Hotel suite having been abandoned.

Sealing Window, Widow, Despondent, Kills Self

New York, Feb. 17 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—After carefully sealing the openings around the kitchen window and door of her apartment with rags, Mrs. Ada McFadden, 50, a widow, last night turned on the gas.

Mrs. Josephine Dussenger, a neighbor, smelled the gas and called Patrolman Boynton Fogarty, who forced the door and found Mrs. McFadden seated in a kitchen chair, a gas tube leading to the stove in her lap. Dr. Holt, of Harlem Hospital, pronounced her dead. Neighbors said the widow had been despondent since the death of her husband a year ago.

SPECULATIVE LOANS WARNING EXPLAINED

Federal Reserve's Bulletin Tells of $252,000,000 Higher Credit Demand.

FACTORS ARE OUTLINED

(Associated Press.)

A statistical analysis of an increased net demand of $252,000,000 during the past year for Federal Reserve Bank credit was set forth yesterday in the Reserve Board's monthly bulletin. The board recently issued a warning to its member banks that reserve bank credit for speculative purposes must be curbed.

The $252,000,000 represented, the bulletin said, a net increase in the demand for reserve bank credit during the year from January 28, 1928, to January 26, 1929. The board outlined as factors causing the increased reserve bank credit demand as a $263,000,000 decrease in monetary gold stock, with a $43,000,000 increase in unexpended capital funds and a $6,000,000 increase in nonmember banks' clearing balances. This made a gross increase in credit demand of $312,000,000, the bulletin added.

The factors during the year which decreased reserve bank credit demand were cited as a $33,000,000 decrease in member bank reserve balances, a $14,000,000 Treasury credit increase and a $13,000,000 Treasury credit increase and a $13,000,000 decrease in money circulation. This represented a total of $60,000,000 for the factors diminishing the demand for credit, leaving a net increase in credit demand of $252,000,000.

Reasons for Warning.

The bulletin reiterated the board's reasons which resulted in the warning for the restraint of the use of reserve credit in speculative loans.

Citing that during the past six years the United States has experienced "a most remarkable run of economic activity and productivity," the board in its bulletin said, "During the last year or more, however, the functioning of the Federal Reserve System has encountered interference by reason of the excessive amount of the country's credit absorbed in speculative security loans."

"The credit situation since the opening of the new year (1929) indicates," the bulletin continued, "that some of the factors which occasioned untoward developments during the year 1928 are still at work. The volume of speculative credit is still growing.

"Coming at a time when the country has lost some $500,000,000 of gold, the effect of the great and growing volume of speculative credit has already produced some strain, which has reflected itself in advances of from 1 to 1½ per cent in the cost of credit for commercial uses. The matter is one that concerns every section of the country and every business interest, as an aggravation of these conditions may be expected to have detrimental effects on business and may impair its future.

Use of Credit Guarded.

"The Federal Reserve Board neither assumes the right nor has it any disposition to set itself up as an arbiter of security speculation or values. It is, however, its business to see to it that the Federal Reserve Banks function as effectively as conditions will permit. When it finds that conditions are arising which obstruct Federal Reserve banks in the effective discharge of their function of so managing the credit facilities of the Federal Reserve system as to accommodate commerce and business, it is its duty to inquire into them and to take such measures as may be deemed suitable and effective in the circumstances to correct them; which, in the immediate situation, means to restrain the use, either directly or indirectly, of Federal Reserve credit facilities in aid of the growth of speculative credit."

The volume of reserve credit outstanding at the end of 1928 showed an increase for the year of $252,000,000, the bulletin said, while the demand for currency showed an increase of $13,000,000. The increase in outstanding reserve credit, it was pointed out, was caused by a loss of $263,000,000 in the stock of monetary gold and an increase of $43,000,000 in unexpended capital funds of the reserve banks, offset in part by a decrease of $33,000,000 in member bank reserve balances.

The chief growth in bank deposits for the year was in time deposits, which require only a 3 per cent reserve, the bulletin added.

CRIME COMMISSION RAPS COUNTY JAILS

Lowden Group's Report Cites Many Abuses and Calls for Wide Reforms.

COUNTY UNITS FAVORED

New York, Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Severely criticizing jails and other local penal institutions throughout the country, a committee of the National Crime Commission, in a report made public today, recommended that the "individual States should take over the care of all their convicted prisoners."

The subcommittee, headed by Frank G. Lowden, former Governor of Illinois, reported that nearly nine-tenths of all commitments are made to local institutions such as county and municipal jails, workhouses, farms, chaingangs and camps, and charged that these constitute "a penal institution hoary with the age of centuries, an institution which England abandoned over 50 years ago."

Horrors Found in Jails.

The report listed the "distinguished features" of the ordinary jail as: "Filth, the herding together of convicted criminals and persons awaiting trial, the mingling of well and foully diseased individuals, the close association of young and old offenders, the prevalence of bedbugs and lice, universal idleness, the prevailing practice of subjecting women prisoners to the oversight of male attendants, and the scheme which one finds in many States of paying the jailer a per diem sum for boarding each prisoner without specifying how much or shall we say, how little food is given to him."

In support of its claims the committee cited the testimony of individuals and excerpts from official reports from several of the States, and declared that "we have been informed by many reliable persons that they represent a fair picture of at least 85 per cent of the jails and other local institutions as they are today."

Units Are Too Small.

It declared that as units of prison administration counties and municipalities are too small; that only under full State control can prisoners be freely shifted to the particular institution best suited to their needs, and that "the State is in a better position to make the ideas and the ideals of the few persons competent in these matters serve the entire community."

"The plan we offer for the remedying of this evil situation," the report continued, "is of a two-fold character, involving, on the one hand, a strengthening of State control, and on the other a building up of county and municipal machinery."

Recognizing that certain difficulties exist in the way of a realization of its program, the committee suggested that there are several ways in which to begin.

Suggestions for Reforms.

"If a State can not afford," it said, "to embark on the policy of creating a sufficient number of institutions to care for all misdemeanant prisoners, it should establish one for a selected group, making the selection not according to the crime, nor the length of sentence, but preferably on the basis of personality."

It stated that the load on local prisons could be lightened to the extent of 28 per cent through the building up of probation agencies and systems for the collection of fines, that the form of sentence should vary with the type of offender, and that the State should care for all convicted misdemeanants in need of institutional treatment.

The report was signed by the secretary of the committee, Louis N. Robinson, noted economist and criminologist. Other members of the committee are Arnold Bennett Hall, Mrs. Jessie D. Hodder, Clark Howell, Sam A. Lewisohn, Sumner T. McKnight, George L. Radcliffe and Charles S. Whitman.

Airport Is Opened; 50,000 Look On

Newark, N. J., Becomes New Eastern Terminus of U. S. Air Mail Service.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—With appropriate ceremonies attended by 50,000 persons Newark's metropolitan airport today became the Eastern terminus of the air mail service of the United States. The transfer from Hadley Field, New Brunswick, which brings the mail about 30 miles nearer New York, was ordered by the post-office authorities.

Mayor Jerome T. Congleton officiated. Notables who attended included Capt. Frank M. Hawks, coast to coast flight record holder; George Haldeman, who was Ruth Elder's transatlantic pilot; Earl B. Wadsworth, superintendent of the air mail division of the United States Postoffice Department, and James H. Doolittle, test pilot for the Guggenheim fund.

At 4:45 a. m. today the first two planes with incoming mail landed. One bore mail from Pan-American points, and the other was a transcontinental plane. Three planes took off from the field at 12:30 p. m., one going direct to Chicago, another to the South, the third to the North.

YOUR INCOME TAX

No. 15.

A loss on the sale of residential property purchased or constructed by the taxpayer for use as his personal residence and so used by him up to the time of the sale is not deductible. Where, however, property so purchased or constructed is prior to its sale rented or otherwise appropriated to income-producing purposes and is used for such purposes up to the time of its sale, a loss from the sale of the property computed as provided in section 111 of the revenue act of 1928, is an allowable deduction in an amount not to exceed the excess of the value of the property at the time it was appropriated to income-producing purposes (with proper adjustment for depreciation) over the amount realized from the sale. However, in case the property was so appropriated prior to March 1, 1913, the loss is an allowable deduction in an amount not to exceed the excess of the value of the property at the time it was so appropriated or at March 1, 1913, whichever is greater (with proper adjustment for depreciation), over the amount realized from the sale. A person claiming a deduction for a loss incurred in the sale of residential property should attach to his return a statement showing how the deduction was computed, including facts as to the use of the property, supported by evidence (records if possible), and the date the property was appropriated to income-producing purposes and its value on the date it was so appropriated.

Papal Swiss Guard Status Held Altered By Concordat

Geneva's New Code Forbids Armed Service in Foreign State Except by Permission; Possible Violation of Switzerland's Neutrality Is Feared.

Geneva, Feb. 17 (U.P.).—Possibility that the status of the famous Swiss Guards might be affected by the Italo-Vatican treaty developed into an interesting and intricate question today.

The new Swiss military code prohibits citizens of Switzerland from enlisting in foreign armed forces without the consent of the Swiss federal council.

Restoration of the Pope's temporal power, even on a nominal basis, raises the question whether the Pope may continue to recruit his Swiss Guard, one of the most picturesque military units in the world. Also, the question is raised whether the presence of this Swiss corps, serving another state, constitutes a violation of Switzerland's neutrality.

These combined problems will be considered by the Swiss federal council as soon as the text of the Italo-Vatican treaties is received. Should the terms of the treaty and concordat signed last week by Premier Mussolini and Cardinal Gasparri, bear out the idea that the Swiss Guard constitutes foreign armed service, prospective recruits hereafter will be obliged to ask permission of the federal council before enlisting. It is considered unlikely that such permission would be refused unless it should develop that service in the guard by a Swiss citizen constitutes violation of Switzerland's neutrality.

However, even this problem might be overcome by a reorganization of the corps on a less belligerent basis.

Although the Swiss Guards have always constituted the Vatican's "shock troops," they were, until the reign of Pope Pius X, armed with the antiquated halberd, and garbed in the picturesque costumes designed for them by Michelangelo.

Under the reign of Pius X, however, the Swiss Col. Repond, commander of the corps, armed them with modern rifles and imposed modern military training and rules.

It is believed here that, should the question of violation of Swiss neutrality arise, reorganization of the Swiss Guards on a less military basis, arming them with the old halberds, and returning them entirely to their medieval costumes and ways, might remove the possible objection that, in serving in the Siss Guard, the 6-footers of Switzerland would be violating their country's neutrality.

Roxana Oil Leases Valid, Court Holds

Mrs. Smith May Not Know Art, but Is Keen Business Woman, Says Judge.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Oil leases in Pecos County, Tex., claimed to be valued at $20,000,000, and held by the Roxana Petroleum Corporation on lands owned by Mrs. M. A. Monroe-Smith, have been adjudged valid by Federal Judge Charles A. Boynton here.

The court held that Mrs. Smith was legally sane at the time she leased her 21,999-acre ranch adjoining the Yates oil pool to the Roxana interests.

"Mrs. Smith may not possess knowledge of art, literature and history, but she has a sound busines acumen and mental capacity for understanding the nature of leases she has entered into," Judge Boynton said, in handing down his decision. The court pointed out that by her business judgment Mrs. Smith had risen from poverty to riches.

The seven children of Mrs. Smith brought suit in the State courts to have her adjudged mentally incompetent. Attorneys for the children indicated the case would be carried to the United States Supreme Court.

Lie Detector to Test Pair in Marriage Case

Chicago, Feb. 17 (U.P.).—Mrs. Marcella Long Buoscio, who claims she is the wife of Henry Bouscio, and the latter, who says he never saw the alleged wife before, will undergo the test of a "lie detecting" machine in court Monday.

The woman claims she was married to Buoscio by a Justice of the peace in a parked automobile in Indiana Harbor.

CHANGE OF SPANISH RULE IS PREDICTED

Premier Expected to Retire or Grant More Liberty to Public Opinion.

ACTION THIS WEEK SEEN

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Events of importance in Spain are expected during the coming week. If Gen. Primo de Rivera does not decide to leave the premiership of the civil dictatorship, it is supposed that he will introduce modifications in the form of government and give more liberty to the Spanish press to comment on the situation.

His action in suspending the full sitting of the national assembly, which had been arranged for the end of February, and the fact that he is not giving out any semiofficial communiques increases the opinion that he is prepared to retire from the office in which he has ruled Spain for more than five years.

An article considered to be a last effort by the government against the attempts of its enemies to gain the power appeared in the newspaper La Nacion, which represents government opinion, yesterday. This article, supposed to have been inspired by a high quarter, spoke of the impossibility of the government withdrawing from power for many years, which are necessary for the reorganization of the country.

Events Followed Closely.

The entire country is following closely developments of events and it is generally believed that the premier will not be able to resist much longer the demands for restoration of a constitutional regime.

An example of the less rigid rule of the government is the greater freedom permitted former Premier Jose Sanchez Guerra, whose political friends are permitted to visit him in his confinement at Valencia.

Valencia, Spain, Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Several members of the family of former Premier Jose Sanchez Guerra, who surrendered himself after the collapse of the recent short-lived revolt, have visited him on the gunboat Canalejas, on which he is confined in this harbor. No visitors are permitted except those of his family and his political friends. Interviews are prohibited.

Assumes Responsibility.

The former premier, according to his visitors, has declined to make any declaration other than that made before the judge, to whom he said he alone was responsible for the recent movements of which he was a leader. He has forgotten or does not care to disclose the names of a number of other persons.

Sanchez Guerra holds to the opinion that his movement was legal since he only called for a return to the constitution which had been sworn to by King Alfonso on his enthronement and also by the army and national assembly. The really seditious people, he charges, are the members of the present government who have broken the constitution which was the basis of the Spanish state.

The Children

By Edith Wharton

A sparkling serial story by one of America's foremost novelists at the gleaming heights of her power.

SYNOPSIS.

Martin Boyne, a civil engineer, who has been kept busy on projects in all parts of the world, is taking an ocean trip. He is looking forward to another fortnight of solitude, when the steward places a chair next to his (argued "Mrs. Cliffe Wheater." Cliffe Wheater was a schoolmate of his at Harvard. His wife was a friend of these days. Boyne is puzzled by the varied types of children in the entourage and (urther mystified by its leader. He is told by the gray-haired woman called "Scopy" her name is Judith. She is the eldest child of the Wheaters. The eldest boy's name is Terry, and his health is poor. "Scopy" recounts the tangled love affairs of the Wheaters to explain the dra»p for Boyne. Boyne begins to mull over his own affairs, particularly with a Mrs. Sellars. Hitherto "unattainable," he recalls her husband has died. Terry, the heir-apparent to the Wheater fortune, asks Boyne to intercede on his behalf with his parents to obtain a tutor. Complying with the Wheaters' request he hires a young Englishman. Boyne leaves the Wheaters and their yacht and retinue at Venice to visit his friend, Mrs. Sellars, at her chalet in the mountains.

THEIR first direct talk about themselves had ended there, drifting away afterward into reminiscences, questions, allusions, the picking up of threads—a gradual leisurely reconstruction of their five years apart. Now, on this second evening, he felt that he had situated her once more in his own life, and established himself in hers. So far he had made no allusion to his unsatisfied passion. In the past, by her own choice, her sternly imposed will, their relation had been maintained in the strict limits of friendship, and for the present he found it easier, more natural, to continue on the same lines. It was neither doubt nor pride that held him back, nor any uncertainty as to her feeling; but simply his sense of the well-being of things as they were. In the course of his life so much easy love had come his way, he had grown so weary of nights without a morrow, that he needed to feel there was one woman in the world whom he was half-afraid to make love to. Rose Sellars had chosen that he should know her only as the perfect friend: just at first, he thought, he would not disturb that carefully built-up picture. If he had suspected a rival influence he would not have tolerated delay; but as they traveled together over her past he grew more and more sure that it was for him the cold empty years of her marriage had kept her. Manlike, he was calmed rather than stimulated by this, though he would have repudiated more indignantly than ever the idea that she was less desirable because she was to be had. As a matter of fact, he found her prettier and younger than when they had parted. Every change in her was to her advantage, and he had instantly discarded his sentimental remembrance of her—dense coils of silvery-auburn hair, and draperies falling to the ankles—in favour of the new woman which her hair, dressed to look short, and her brief skirts, had made of her. Freedom of spirit and of body had mysteriously rejuvenated her, and he found her far more intelligent and adaptable than he had guessed when their relation had been obscured by his passion and her resistance. Now there was no resistance—and his passion lay with folded wings. It was perfect.

Every day they went off on an excursion. Sometimes they hired a motor, leaving it, far afield, for a long climb; but neither could afford such luxuries often, nor did they much care for them. Usually they started on foot, with stick and rucksack, getting back only as the great cliffs hung their last luster above the valley. Mrs. Sellars was a tireless walker, proud of her light foot and firm muscles. She loved all the delicate detail revealed only to walkers; the thrust of orchis or colchicum through pine-needles, a stir of brooks, the unsurling of perfumed fronds, the whirr of wings in the path, and that continual pulsation of water and wind and grasses which is the heart-beat of the forest. Boyne, always alive to great landscape, had hitherto been too busy or preoccupied to note its particulars. It was years since he had rambled among mountains without having to look at them with an engineering eye, and calculate their relation to a projected railway or acqueduct; and these walks always opened his eyes to unheeded beauties. It was like being led through the flowered borders of an illuminated missal of which he had hitherto noticed only the central pictures.

Better still were the evenings. When he first came a full moon held them late on the balcony, listening and musing, and sent him dizzy with beauty through the black fir-shadows to his hotel. When the moon had waned, and the nights were fresh or cloudy, they sat by the fire, and talked and talked, or turned over new books and reviews. Boyne, with his bones and brains so full of hard journeys and restless memories, thought he would have liked to look forward to an eternity of such evenings, in just such a hushed lamplit room, with a little sparkle of fire, reviews and papers everywhere, and that quiet silvery-auburn head with its mass of closely woven braids bending over a book across the hearth. Rose Sellers' way of being silently occupied without seeming absorbed was deeply restful. And then her books! She always managed to have just the ones he wanted to get hold of—to a homeless wandering man it was not the least of her attractions. Once, taking up a volume they had been talking of, Boyne recalled Judith Wheater's wistful. "Perhaps you might lend me some books." From what fold of memory had the question—and the very sound of the girl's voice—come back to him? He was abruptly reminded that it was a long time since he had given a thought to the little Wheaters.

There had been so many years to cover in the exchange of reminiscences that he had not yet touched on his encounter with them; and Mrs. Sellars seemed to have forgotten the description of the little band which had amused her in his letters. But now he was reminded, with a pang, of the contrast between her ordered and harmonious life (she always reminded him of Milton's "How charming is divine philosophy!") and the chaotic experiences of the poor little girl who for a moment had displaced her image. Inconceivably vulgar and tawdry, sordid and inarticulate, under all the shouting and the tinsel, seemed that other life and those who led it. Boyne would have brushed the vision away with contempt but for the voice which had called to him out of the blur. With a sigh he put down the book he had opened. Mrs. Sellars, who sat at the table writing, looked up, and their eyes met. "What were you thinking of?"

He had a start of distrust—the first since he had been with her. Would she understand if he tried to explain: if she did, would she sympathize? He shrank from the risk, and evaded it. "Seeing you so hard at work reminds me of all the letters I have written since I've been here."

She arched her eyebrows interrogatively, and he was sure she was thinking: "Why doesn't he tell me that he's no one to write to when he's with me?" Aloud she said: "You know I'm burdened with any number of fond relations who are consumed with the desire to know how I'm spending my first holiday."

"You're a wonderful correspondent."

As if scenting irony, she rejoined: "So are you."

"I haven't been since I came here."

"Well, come and share the inkpot." She made the gesture of pushing it over to him, but he shook his head and stood up. "The night's too lovely. Put on your cloak and come out on the balcony."

She held her pen suspended, her eyes following his. "On the balcony? But there's no moon—"

"Because there's no moon," he insisted, smiling.

At that, smiling too, she drifted out to him.

What Today Means to You

FEBRUARY 18

By MARY BLAKE

"AQUARIUS."

IF February 18 is your birthday, the most propitious hours for you today are from 9 a. m. to 10 a. m., from 1:15 a. m. to 12:15 p. m., from 3:45 p. m. to 4:50 p. m., and from 6:30 p. m to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 2 p. m. to 3 p. m., and from 6 p. m. to 7 p. m.

Today may prove your doomsday, financially and socially, unless you walk and follow the path of prudence. Pitfalls will exist in great numbers for the reckless and foolish.

The child born today will be gifted with an exceptional degree of perserverance. It will never acknowledge defeat, and will carry on at a task until it is done. It will have great mental and moral stamina.

You are intensely kind and sypmathetic. You love children, who in turn love and confide in you. Your sympathetic nature inspired the confidence of all and sundry alike, and you are able to dispel worries and troubles. You have a wide understanding of human nature broad-minded enough to realize that there is evil in all of us. For this tolerant view of mankind, you are loved and respected by all those who come in contact with you. You are studious and never tire of delving into books, whose contents you devour omnivorously. You seem to live and conduct yourself by the code, "The profit of every act should be this, that it was right for us to do it. Any profit than that, if it involved a kingdom, or the person I love ought, if I were God's upright soldier, to leave me untempted."

You enjoy outdoor sports and any form of activity. You enjoy gatherings of a light social character, but shun displays of wealth and snobbishness where pretense and ostentation seem to be the main ingredients displayed. You excel in any friendly game.

You are religious and live your life in a way consistent with your beliefs. You are undoubtedly a well liked and respected member of your community. Your marital relations will be of the finest, and true love and enduring affection will be given you by your mate. The stars portend a happy and contented life for you.

Former Slave, Faithful To "Old Missy," 91, Dies

Middletown, Conn., Feb. 17 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—George Washington, negro slave, who fought with the Union Army throughout the Civil War, died last night of old age. He did not know the date of his birth, but his "old missy," Miss Cornelia H. Wetmore, of this city, who survives him, was 99 last month. He refused to leave her and until recently had performed many duties of the household.

Washington prized his Civil War services and was a member of the local Grand Army Post, which will turn out for his funeral. For years he has marched with the veterans each Memorial Day as flag bearer.

TODAY'S WOMEN

By EARL MINDERMAN

FEBRUARY 18.

MARY, Queen of England from 1553 to 1558, was born this day, 1516. She was a daughter of Henry VIII, who engaged the best tutors in the land to give her a careful education.

At the age of 2, Mary was bethrothed to the Dauphin of France, but changes in policy brought changes in the arrangements for her marriage. Before any of them could be carried out, she ascended the throne and was at liberty to choose her own consort. Her choice was Philip, son of Charles V.

The queen's choice was unpopular with the people and a minor rebellion broke out in protest. He was 11 years younger than she and although she loved him desperately, she received in return only coldness and neglect. Anxious to please him, she joined in a war against France and lost Calais.

The last days of Queen Mary's reign was darkened by religious persecutions. She died at the age of 42.

THE ONCE OVER

By H. I. PHILLIPS

MR. COOLIDGE WRITES MR. HOOVER A FEW WORDS OF ADVICE.

Dear Herbert:

As I will be getting out shortly and you will be taking over the job, I thought a few lines warning you of certain pitfalls would be welcome.

First, Herbert, take care of your health. The people of this country don't seem to give a whoop about a man's health after they have elected him President. It is therefore up to him to look out for himself. The voters seem to think that the job of President of the United States is a combination rodeo, vaudeville act, barbecue, talk-marathon and moving picture performance.

* * * *

You'll have to put your foot down hard against the idea you're a public entertainer at the outset. Don't compromise. Once you land any encouragement to the assumption you're a one-man circus, you're sunk. Give the public one little performance in a cowboy hat and they'll expect you to spend the whole four years imitating Pawnee Bill, Kit Carson, Tom Mix and Deadeye Dick. I know.

* * * *

I made the mistake of putting on a cowboy suit early in my administration and I never could get completely out of the darned thing. One big kick I'll get out of retiring to private life, Herb, will come when I'm able to look any funny hat distributor in the face and tell him to go to blazes.

* * * *

Don't ever let anybody slip a cowboy bonnet on you and avoid spurs and "chaps" as if they were poison. This goes for feathers, too. I got into an Indian headdress in an unguarded moment a few summers ago and the public has been expecting me to go around looking like a turkey ever since.

* * * *

And, Herb, be careful about your fishing. I could have cried when I read about your catching those 45-pound sailfish down South. That was a big mistake and you'll live to regret it. You'll never be able to go fishing hereafter and come home with a small fish like a trout or a pickerel without providing a big disappointment to the American people. They'll always expect 45-pounders. I started off with bullheads and worked up gradually to trout and wall-eyed pike. Even at that I would have been happier had I stuck to bullheads.

* * * *

I'd advise you to make some sort of statement to the public right away denying that you ever caught a sailfish and saying it was a baby bluefish or something of no account. Then they won't expect too much of you and over to the Democratic party when you go fishing this summer and come back with something so small one man can carry it.

* * * *

Above everything else, Herb, make it clear that you're not a motion picture actor. These camera men will take years off your life if you give 'em an inch. One of the things I want to do when I quit is to thumb my nose at all news-weekly and press photographers. I'm just waiting for the day when I can go out on a porch, face 1,000 cameramen and say, "You can all go jump into the lake."

* * * *

Well, I hope these few words of advice will be of some help to you and that you will take her in the spirit in which they are sent. I wish you the best of luck in the office and hope the public will give you an even break.

Yours truly, CALVIN.

P. S.—If you get an electric horse keep it secret, otherwise you'll never hear the last of it.

OH, DUCHESS!

Novel and jaunty must have been the recent wedding at St. Margaret's, Westminster, according to the New York Times. "The eight bridesmaids," says that paper, "included three pieces of the Duchess of York."

* * * *

Senator Capper wants to put teeth in the Kellogg treaty renouncing war. Just a set of uppers, possibly, so that in any event it can't bite the hand that feeds it.

* * * *

President Gil of Mexico appears to be in almost as much jeopardy as a man on a public golf links.

A THREE DAYS' COUGH IS YOUR DANGER SIGNAL

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for coughs from colds and bronchial irritations. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs from colds, bronchitis and minor forms of bronchial irritations, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (adv.)

SHARKEY BOXES DESPITE WARNING FROM DEMPSEY

Barbuti Faces Test at N. Y. Tonight

Olympic Champion to Meet Tierney, Ball, Cuhel and Others.

Wildermuth Is Among Sprint Stars Opposing Williams.

NEW YORK, Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Ray Barbuti, Olympic 400-meter champion, make his first competitive start of the season in the New York A. C. games tomorrow night at Madison Square Garden.

The big sprinter, developed by Tom Keaney, at Syracuse University, is entered in the Buermeyer 500-yards, classic feature of the games.

Possibly the greatest competitive runner of the day, Barbuti will need to be in something approaching his best form to outrun a field that is to include Joe Tierney, of the New York A. C., twice returned a winner in the Buermeyer 500; Jimmy Ball, of Canada, runner-up to Barbuti in the thrilling 400-meter final at Amsterdam; Frank Cuhel, of Iowa, runner-up to David Bughley in the Olympic 400-meter hurdles, and Bernie McAfferty, Holy Cross freshman, who is unbeaten at any distance under 600 yards this season.

Ball, Unaccustomed to Indoor Running, Is Handicapped.

Advance calculations seem to indicate that the battle will be between Barbuti, Tierney and McAfferty. Tierney has the most at stake. Victor in the 1924 and 1928 renewals of the race, he can win permanent possession of the trophy by leading home the field tomorrow night. Incidentally, Tierney set the present world's record of 58 seconds when he won the trophy the first time.

Ball, unaccustomed to indoor running, will be under a serious handicap against a field of experienced indoor runners like Barbuti, Tierney and McAfferty.

Fresh from a world's record-breaking performance at the Metropolitan A. A. U. championships last night, Percy Williams, the Olympic double sprint winner from Vancouver, British Columbia, will run in a sprint special at 60 yards against such stars as Karl Wildermuth, of Georgetown; Jimmy Quinn, of the New York A. C., who won the event last year, Frank Hussey, Jack Elder, Notre Dame, and Jim Daley, Holy Cross.

The Brefney half mile has attracted a select field, including Sam Martin, of the Boston A. A.; Phil Edwards, of New York U.; George Offenhauser, of Penn State; Fred Veit, of New York U., and Jack Mara, of Georgetown.

The Georgetown mile relay team of Cranley, O'Shea, Cosh and Hoctor will be in New York tonight, ready to meet any opponent picked for them in the New York A. C. games. The Holy Cross Quartet, recent winner over the Hoya Four, had been scheduled to oppose the local team tonight, but withdrew its entry last Saturday.

In addition to Karl Wildermuth and Jack Mara, whose races are mentioned above, Eric Kjellstrom, member of the Swedish Olympic Team, will represent Georgetown in the hurdles. Kjellstrom, a junior at the Hilltop, has flashed brilliant form in practice and will be making his first 1929 competitive appearance tonight.

Coach O'Reilly's squad will engage in a practice meet with Navy at Annapolis Saturday by way of polishing up for the National A. A. U. championships which will be conducted in New York on Saturday.

Maureen Orcutt Plays In British Tournament

New York, Feb. 17 (United Press).—Miss Maureen Orcutt, women's metropolitan golf champion, will compete in the women's British championship at St. Andrews, starting May 13. She plans to sail April 20. After the English tournament she probably will enter the French championships.

G. U. Track Team Is Picked To Win Intercollegiate Title

Sexton's Performance Is Key to Success of Hilltop Team.

By JACK ESPEY.

THE athletic young men of Georgetown University who specialize in placing one foot before the other very rapidly are being hailed as prospective winners of the indoor intercollegiate track and field championships which will be up for decision on March 2 in Madison Square Garden.

If you are not particularly interested in the doings of fleet and sinewy young men, the dope, or calculations, hereinafter set forth probably will not make your heart flutter. But if you do follow the activities of said sports disciples—and those of Georgetown especially—keep your eye moving from left to right toward the south.

Our information comes from several sources which, to put it conservatively, know college track and field most thoroughly. Whether it is right only the big event itself will tell.

Not since 1925 has the Hilltop's record been embellished with the intercollegiate indoor title. Twice since then the honor has been denied Coach John D. O'Reilly's pupils by one-half to two and one-half points, last year the title being annexed by Cornell, who shaded Georgetown, 20½ to 20.

Sexton Is Key to Georgetown Victory in Intercollegiates.

Georgetown will win the championship this year, according to the informants, by virtue of the presence on O'Reilly's squad of one Leo Sexton, a 21-year-old junior, who weighs 220 and stands 6 feet 3 inches with bare feet and hair slicked back.

Sexton is being counted on to produce from 10 to 15 points for his alma mater—a very commendable feat when you consider that the usual winning team total is about 20. The low down is that Sexton is going to outhigh jump, outshot put and outtoss the boys in the 35-pound weight, for which Georgetown will receive five, five and five, as points are distributed for first places.

Already this season, Sexton has made the best high jump in Eastern competition, a leap of 6 feet 4 inches in the Meadowbrook games in the same meet he bested a field of top-notch shot men—Dave Adelman, Georgetown's intercollegiate champion, among them—and he convinced the critics that he had yet to reach his zenith.

Cornell-Nipped Hilltop Last Year in 35-Pound Weight Event.

But it is because of his ability with the 35-pound weight that so much importance is attached to Sexton in the coming classic. He has been slinging the weight nearly 55 feet in recent practices and the intercollegiate record is 53 feet 11½ inches.

Last year, Cornell nipped the Hilltop because of its overwhelming strength in the 35-pound weight event. The Ithacans scored 13 points in that, with Norwood Wright making the record.

Sexton, of course, can not win the meet single-handed, but if he captures first in the three mentioned events, Georgetown will not have to worry much about finishing with the title.

He will be ably supported by Karl Wildermuth and Morris Lerner in the 70-yard dash, by Adelman in the shot put, by Kjellstrom in the hurdles, and by the Hoya mile and 2-mile relay teams.

Wildermuth Generally Rated As Sure Point-Scorer.

Wildermuth generally is rated a sure point scorer in the 70-yard race. Only Percy Williams and Bob McAllister have defeated him at distances from 40 to 100 yards this winter, and neither of these two are intercollegiate contestants.

The prophets figure Wildermuth for 5 points and Adelman for at least 3. Eight points from them added to Sexton's 15 would give G. U. 23, or enough to win the championship under ordinary conditions. However, the prognosticators do not stop with that.

Both of the Hoya relay teams are picked to score at least 1 point, while the 2-mile team, which won easily in the Meadowbrook meet, stands a good chance of getting home first. From 2 to 6 more points there.

Then, not to leave their work incomplete, the seers see point-scoring possibilities in Dan Hennessey and Joe Augustine, milers. Augustine is said to be the better of the latter two right now, though Hennessey was good enough last year to finish sixth in the intercollegiates.

G. U. Bars Kennedy From New York Race

Jimmy Kennedy, Georgetown freshman who has been something of a sensation in Northern track meets this winter, has been barred by Hilltop authorities from competing in the Baxter mile run, celebrated feature of the New York Athletic Club games, tonight in New York.

Kennedy, former Vineland (N. J.) High School star, did not pass midyear examinations, and he will be ineligible to compete in a Georgetown uniform until he erases three conditions from his scholastic standing.

In four meets this season, Kennedy has done surprisingly well against opposition from the cream of Eastern middle distance runners. He holds a 1,000-yard victory over Phil Edwards, New York University, holder of the intercollegiate half-mile and national amateur 600-yard championships, and also Sam Martin, famous Boston Athletic Association flier. He had been entered with another high-class field in the Baxter mile.

Hogan and Hubbell Bid Fair To Become Famous Battery

Big Catcher Developing Fast Afield and as Hitter; Hubbell Showed Class as Soon as He Joined Giants Last Year.

SOME famous batterise have held forth for the Giants in days gone by. Among them were Keefe and Ewing, Rusie and Farrell, Matty and Bresnahan, Marquard and Myers, Nehf and Snyder, all of whom made baseball history that will never die and whose names were bywords in the land.

It has been six years now since the Giant-Yankee world series in 1923, and no battery of outstanding achievements or personal appeal has come to the Polo Grounds to take their place.

Last year, however, a kid battery under the entitlement of Hubbell and Hogan began to perform in a manner to win the favor of those wise and loyal fans who mix so much joy and sorrow into their summer afternoons under the lee of Coogan's bluff.

Francis Hogan, the big catcher secured from Boston in the famous Hornsby deal, started the season last year at the Polo Grounds in a rather inauspicious way. He came heralded as a slugger, and he did hit the ball hard and often from the beginning, but his workmanship behind the plate lacked sureness and skill, to say nothing of polish.

Hogan Ended Season a Good Catcher With Stick Average of .333.

But under the magic hand of McGraw, this bulky young man developed amazingly. By midseason, he was rated as a corking good catcher, if not a finished product, and as for his hitting, it was like unto that of Bresnahan and Snyder in their heydey. He played in 131 games and batted .333, making 25 doubles and 10 home runs, an imposing record for any second-year man.

His hitting was both deadly and helpful. He hit in the pinches and in the tough games. He had a habit of cutting the ball like a bullet down the third-base line just inside the bag, and that hit generally went for a double, and it started many rallies and won many ball games.

And the big boy got to be quite a catcher. He improved day by day with an aptitude that tended to make McGraw forget about his backstop worries of the last five seasons. He did seem to have a catcher who could hit, and a hitter who showed much promise of being a fine catcher.

Pitcher Hubbell Showed Class As Soon as He Joined McGraw.

Hogan will not be 23 until next month, and is a Somerville, Mass., boy. He played part of a season with Lynn, Mass., before coming to the Braves in 1927. He is a 200 pounder but active and fast for his heft, and is an earnest, unctuous lad. Only excessive poundage will keep him from being a great backstop.

When McGraw called Carl Hubbell up from Beaumont, Tex., in midseason last year the announcement did not stir up a ripple in baseball or press circles. But a few days later when he went in against the first place Cardinals and held them scoreless for some ten innings of an extra inning game, he attracted plenty of attention. He lost the game in the last inning, it is true, but he showed so much courage, coolness and skill that day in a supreme test that his next appearance in the box was looked forward to with much interest.

He pitched that same brand of ball clear to the end of the season. Under the strain of a pennant fight from which his team was not eliminated until almost the last day of the struggle, this young Texas Leaguer never faltered or "blew." He won 10 games and lost 6. He ranked sixth in effectiveness among National League pitchers with an earned run average of 2.83.

Hogan-Hubbell Battery Bids Fair to Cause a Sensation.

In fact, this young lefthander with the deceptive curves, the control, the courage and the sang froid shows all the earmarks of a great pitcher. He was born and raised in Carthage, Mo., and now lives in Meeker, Okla. He is 25 years old.

Hubbell and Hogan! Sounds good. The expression may well become famous. Why not? This giant catcher who is also a slashing hitter, is quick, keen and apt. And the slender, supple, cunning Hubbell, cool as an icicle deadly in the pinches and with control that not one lefthander in a score shows when he ascends the big league hill. Hubbell and Hogan, mark well this battery. Here are color, class and a world of promise. If they do not make history at the Polo Grounds next summer then what's the use to ever make any predictions about young ball players.

Catcher Bolton Signs To Play With Nationals

Catcher Cliff Bolton has accepted terms to play with the Nationals during the coming season, according to word received here last night from President Clark Griffith, who is vacationing at Tampa.

Bolton, just voting age, made quite a name for himself while with the High Point Team of the Piedmont League last season. A left-handed hitter, he batted .403, which assures him of a real trial when he reports at the training camp for his first big league workout next Monday.

RIALTOS WIN OPENER.

The Rialto All-Stars, latest addition to court circles, defeated the Hebrew Scholastics at the J. C. C. gym yesterday, 36-27. Abe Povich, Joe Rod, and Bennie Mensh starred for the winners with 14, 11, and 9 points respectively. Sykes was the outstanding Rialto defensive player. Sklar played a stellar game for the losers. The Rialtos meet the Terminal Express tonight at the Union Station gym at 8 o'clock, and play the Trinity M. E. Five on Thursday night at the new Eastern High gym.

BUCS SIGN CHAMBERS.

The Pittsburgh Club has signed Mike Chambers, former University of Iowa and Ohio State University trainer. He will try to keep Donie Bush's pitching staff from caving in with arm trouble.

POTOMAC VS. GRAYS.

The Potomac Boat Club will meet the Grays tonight at Central High School, play starting at 8 o'clock.

Soccer League Titles Won And Tied

Clan Beats Concords, 3-1, for Washington League Honor.

Arcadians Stop Rockville, 3-0, to Tie in Capital City.

By RICHARD S. TENNYSON.

CLAN MACLENNAN won the Washington Soccer League championship and The Washington Post Cup yesterday by defeating Concord, 3 to 1, while the Arcadians deadlocked the race for the Capital City League title by defeating Rockville in a replayed game, 3 to 0.

Karl Clark was the main factor in putting the Arcadians in a tie with Rockville for the Capital City championship. The Boston Brave outfielder flashed one of the most brilliant soccer games of his career in his determined efforts to keep the Arcadia boys in the running for the league honors.

The play-off for the league title probably will be set for next Sunday on the Silver Spring Field, where yesterday's match was played. Aside from being a scheduled match for the league honors, the game yesterday was in the nature of a benefit for Bruce Carr, Rockville player, who received a broken leg in the incompleted match last Sunday. More than 1,000 spectators lined the side lines to witness the battle and help swell the contributions.

Concord, British United Booters, Are Tied for Second Place.

The Clan MacLennan victory marks the first time that a team other than Walford has won the Washington Soccer League championship. The race this season has been a close one with three teams in the thick of the fight for the title down to the last two weeks of play. Clan leads the pack by the narrow margin of one point, having a total of ten. Concord and British United are tied for second with nine points each.

The Arcadians had the best of the going at nearly every period of the game. Except on rare occasions, the ball was almost constantly in Rockville territory and Poole, the Rockville goalie, was kept busy stopping shots from the toes of the victors. Incidentally, he played a bang-up game for the losing combination, despite the three goals that got by him.

Earl and Tom Clark and Parker kept the ball in the Rockville area with lusty boots, although kicking upgrade in the first period. Rockville's defense was good and it appeared that the clever work of the Arcadian forward line was not good enough to penetrate the stone-wall defense put up by the Marylanders.

E. Clark Makes First Score Near End of Opening Period.

It was in the final two minutes of the first half when the first marker of the day was registered. Tomagni and Wolf passed the ball back and forth within 10 yards of the Rockville goal for about a minute when Earl Clark saw an opportunity to score. He blocked the leather, steadied himself momentarily, and then crashed a terrific shot at the Rockville goal. The ball hit the lower side of the crosspiece and dropped in the goal. Poole did not hove a chance of blocking the shot.

The second half was not two minutes old when Endress lifted a long shot from midfield to the Rockville penalty area. After a short scramble, Tom Clark booted the second goal through.

After this success, the Rockville kickers launched a dangerous attack on the Arcadian goal and only the agile saving of Hussey and clever defending of Poole and Clanton held the attackers off. Clanton turned the tables completely on one occasion, when he booted the ball field length to the Rockville goal area and placed the attackers on the defense in a flash.

Johnny Malloch Is Hero as Clan Booters Win Title.

The Maryland boys came back and forced the game to Arcadian territory and Hussey was forced to concede several corners to save his goal. L. Coleman led the Rockville attacks, while Helm kept his forwards fed with well-directed boots.

The game see-sawed near the close and, in the last minute of play, Earl Clark got hold of one to his liking and smashed it so hard at Poole that the latter had the ball in his hand but it bounded from him and into the goal for the third marker.

Johnny Malloch was the big noise in the Clan MacLennan victory. He played his usual clever combination game and scored two goals. The field at Bladensburg, where the game was played, was in terrible shape, the muddy going slowing the teams considerably.

The first period was by far the best. Neither team scored for 25 minutes and then Malloch registered the first of his goals. In the last minute of the half Ulrich equalized with a neat tap past Staatz, Clan goalie.

The Clan forwards pulled themselves together in the second half and kept the game mostly in Concord territory and Dave McLean put the Scotchmen in the lead, never to be headed, with one of his bullet-like shots. Toward the close of the game, Malloch added one for good measure.

A special meeting of the Capital City League will be held tonight in the playground office, room 2, District Building, at 8 o'clock. President George Youngblood of the league has requested that each team have a representative at the meeting.

First Squad of Cubs On Hand for Training

Avalon, Santa Catalina Island, Calif., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—The first contingent of the Chicago Cubs Baseball Club arrived here early today. Pitchers and catchers, preparing for the 1929 National League race, dominated the vanguard of the Cubs' early training group.

The party, disembarking amid music and cheers from native islanders and visitors, numbered 28, Art Nehf, Pat Malone, Charley Root and Grover Land, the new Cub coach, having joined the contingent at Wilmington, Calif.

The initial workout is scheduled for 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The second squad is scheduled to arrive here on February 26. It will be comprised of infielders and outfielders.

Fighter Is Exonerated In Death of Opponent

Kewanee, Ill., Feb. 17 (U.P.).—Lou Denny, Chicago boxer, was exonerated of blame in the death of Eddie Chandler, Moline bantamweight, who died from the effects of a blow delivered by Denny last Friday night.

Chandler was knocked out in the ninth round of the bout with Denny and never regained consciousness. He died last night. A coroner's jury heard testimony today and cleared Denny of responsibility.

Almost the Naked Truth

By JAMES S. COLLINS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 17.—Many a round-shouldered, astigmatic bookkeeper, reading of Gene Tunney's butterfly existence in the few remaining garden spots of frost-bitten Europe, must be tempted to clip out and mail that correspondence course coupon to Prof. Jimmy Deforest, the famous long range boxing instructor, Mr. Tunney, tobganning at St. Moritz or romping on the Riviera to ease the ennui of a year's idling, presents one side of the pugilistic picture.

Al Walker, negro heavyweight, disconsolately wondering where his next pair of pork chops are coming from and whether he could eat them if they did come, presents the other. Tunney has more than $1,000,000, world-wide notoriety and one slightly cauliflowered ear to show for his ring endeavors. About all Walker has to show are a newly-broken nose, seven fresh stitches on cuts on his face and $304 which he received along with the broken nose and the seven stitches for fighting big Bill Hartwell in Newark, N. J., the other night.

Hatwell, with whom he fought 15 savage rounds to a draw, also received a broken nose and $304. Some of the $304 Bill received will be spent to replace several teeth he lost in the encounter.

Walker Began to Have His Doubts About the Fight Racket.

There are times when Walker must begin to doubt if the fight racket is what it is cracked up to be. Several months ago he and Joe Barlow put on so savage a fight at the St. Nicholas arena that many of the spectators had to take to their beds for days. First Barlow and then Walker would step into a haymaker and go to the floor, only to struggle to his feet and return the attention. Finally Barlow caved in one of the negro's ribs and he went down for keeps.

The beating he took that night was enough to make the average man a bed-ridden invalid for life, but as soon as his ribs healed Walker surprised the

Johnny Beckman Sold To Cleveland Quintet

Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Tired and worn from strenuous basketball activity of 22 successive seasons, Johnny Beckman will hit the trail again tomorrow to join the Cleveland Club, of the American Basket Ball League. Johnny's sale by the Rochester Team was announced today by Johnny Murphy, owner of the Centrals.

Beckman topped the American League in average points per game for the first half of the season, closed February 9, and he also tied the single-game mark of 24 points for a single counter, now held jointly by Beckman and "Chick" Lapchick, a former Celtic teammate. Since January 19, when Beckman injured his back against the Chicago Club, he has been of very little use to Rochester and Murphy plans on getting through the second half of the schedule with his young players.

Paulino and Christner Meet Friday at N. Y.

New York, Feb. 17 (United Press).—Heavyweights will return to Madison Square Garden this week when K. O. Christner, 34-year-old Akron, Ohio, fighter, meets Paulino Uzcudun, of Spain, in a ten-round bout Friday night. The winner will be matched with Tom Heeney, Max Schmeling upon his return from Germany or the victor of the Sharkey-Stribling bout.

GALLAUDET'S ACE LEADS SCORERS

Cosgrove Is Likely to End Season as High Gun of District.

UNLESS the unusual happens, Del Cosgrove, Gallaudet College forward, will break the tape first at the close of the race for scoring honors among District college basketers. Leading his nearest competitors, Mesmer, of Georgetown, and Burgess, of American, by 21 and 24 points, respectively, the ace of the Silents, with a total of 156 points, has two more games in which to hold his own.

While Georgetown has three more games and American four, it is hardly likely that either Mesmer or Burgess can overhaul Cosgrove unless he suddenly goes blind or breaks a leg.

Mesmer holds second place, with a total of 135 points, three more than the collection of Burgess, who during the past week climbed from fifth place to third at the expense of Dutton and McCarthy, of Georgetown. Burgess went on a rampage in three battles last week, to gain 47 points.

Georgetown is far out in front in team scoring, with 609 points. Gallaudet is second, with 461.

Thumb Injury Disregarded By Fighter

Pummels His Sparring Mates Before Worried Promoter.

Dempsey Sees Stribling Box; Visions a Foul Blow.

By EDWARD J. NEIL
(Associated Press Sports Writer).

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Feb. 17 (A. P.).—One of the best dressed men in the entire South, the center of every gathering, hero of the "kids" and play fellow of the wealthy, brooded fitfully today about the dog track and casino where Jack Sharkey and Young Stribling went through the daily process of preparing for their heavyweight embroglio ten days from tonight.

The big fellow with the bronzed face, keen black eyes and restless mien is Jack Dempsey standing on the outside as a promoter and looking in on the workings of two fighters with ill-concealed nervousness. The Old Manassa Mauler, not content with having promoted a battle that seemed destined for failure into a certain success financially, socially and fistically, would love to jump into both of those rings and get the men ready for the fray himself.

Now, with the reins Tex Rickard dropped in death firmly in his hands, Dempsey is worrying about everything that can worry a promoter. He is afraid of injury to both fighters. He looks daily at the arena, now completed and ready to seat 35,000 in Flamingo Park, to be sure it's still there, and he haunts the afternoon workouts of the battlers with constant forebodings of accidents.

Sharkey Gives Dempsey Cause to Worry About His Fight.

Today he had his first cause for worry over Sharkey, who injured his left thumb eking out a narrow victory over K. Christner, of Akron, in a rugged fracas in Madison Square Garden last month. The Boston tar twisted the same thumb yesterday landing a punch on the heavy skull of Paul Hoffman, one of his sparring partners. Bright and early today Dempsey visited the Sharkey training quarters to find out the extent of the injury and then went into a protracted worrying session with himself on the beach.

After Dempsey advised the Boston sailor to refrain from boxing this afternoon, Sharkey went out and pummeled his sparring partners for five rounds. Dempsey prowled about the ringside every moment of the action, his rakish panama pulled down over his eyes, worrying as thoroughly as Tex Rickard ever did.

Sharkey kept his weapons trained on the moderately soft bodies of Paul Hoffman for two rounds, Johnny Grosso, Pat McCarthy and Charlie Pond for a round apiece.

Former Sailor Appears Slow in Workout But Saves Himself.

He showed no sign of the injury, but decided to do no work tomorrow. Sharkey was slow and listless in his drill and appeared to be saving energy for final polishing workouts.

A few minutes after Sharkey ended his work for the day with five rounds of bag punching, rope skipping and shadow boxing, Dempsey appeared at the Casino where Stribling toils and found something more to worry about there. The Macon youngster, in razor-edge condition, was fast and hard, but had difficulty controlling the left hook he hopes will beat Sharkey.

Time and again Stribling whipped over those southpaw pokes only to find them shading the foul line and sometimes dropping below. Dempsey went away from there, worrying about the possibilities of a foul ending his first promotorial venture on the night of February 27.

Stribling Appears in Perfect Condition for Battle.

Stribling at 185½ pounds seemed in perfect condition. He was faster than ever before and found a real opponent in his newest sparring mate, Paul Cavalier, a heavyweight imported from Paterson, N. J. Stribling cut his work to seven rounds, boxing two sessions with Tony Fuente and another with Blondie Davis, of Memphis, Tenn. Like Sharkey, the Georgian will rest tomorrow and may do work Tuesday.

Although Sunday was the quietest day of the ticket sale, William F. Carey, acting head of the Garden corporation, said the receipts now total more than $200,000 in cash with reservations of almost $100,000 more. The arena in Flamingo Park will be enlarged to seat a total of 42,000, with total receipts approximating $350,000. Expenses of the fight, including a guarantee of $100,000 to Sharkey, will not exceed $260,000.

Rookie Pitcher Reports To Braves by Mistake

St. Petersburg, Fla., Feb. 17 (United Press).—The advance guard of the Boston Braves arrived here tonight, and the first workout will be held Monday under the direction of President-Manager Emil Fuchs. Six pitchers and four catchers are here, with others expected to arrive Monday.

Bunnie Hearn, southpaw, who was sent to Shreveport last summer, is here with the batterymen through a mistake and he probably will get the unwelcome news Monday that he is to go back to Shreveport.

DISTRICT COLLEGE FIVES IN TEN GAMES THIS WEEK

G. U. to Battle Middies in Feature

Tackles Navy Court Team Wednesday at Annapolis.

C. U. Host to Colonials—Five Games for Saturday.

LOCAL college basket ball teams start down the stretch this week, playing ten games, only two of which will be presented for consumption of their home-town supporters. After Saturday but four contests remain on the general program.

George Washington will appear in both local clashes. Georgetown likely will attract quite a few lovers of the court sport to Annapolis for its game on Wednesday afternoon.

The Colonials Wednesday night will make their annual invasion of Catholic University's Gymnasium in the first of a two-game series. Probably the largest crowd of the season will see this game. Added to the interest generated by traditional rivalry between these two institutions, their encounter this year gains attention because of its prospects for evenly matched competition—something hitherto absent with Catholic quintets having been far superior.

Catholic U. Favored by Dope To Defeat G. W. Wednesday.

Inasmuch as Catholic defeated American University, which twice trimmed George Washington, the Brookland quintet probably will be the pregame favorite. Not so however in the minds of George Washington adherents and players. They scent a basket ball victory over their old rivals at last. As matters stand now, the fans may feel certain that a blood-and-thunder thriller will occupy the boards Wednesday night.

Georgetown faces two stiff games, Temple University, which will be met Saturday in Philadelphia, looms as an equally formidable foe as Navy. The Temple Five ran rough-shod over West Virginia prior to the latter's defeat of Georgetown University last Saturday.

Of the two contests, Georgetown is more concerned about that with Navy, for a decision over any athletic representative of the Naval Academy is much valued by the Hilltop. The Middies have been taking their beatings with their triumphs this winter and Georgetown is picked to repeat its 1928 win.

Maryland Ends Season in Baltimore on Saturday.

American University goes on the road midway in the week, being scheduled to play return games with Juniata and Duquense on Wednesday and Thursday nights. Forrest Burgess & Co is fired with the desire to avenge a 48-to-40 overtime licking suffered from Duquesne here a week ago. Juniata was beaten rather easily by the Eagles last Friday.

Maryland will play its last scheduled game on Saturday with Johns Hopkins acting as host in Baltimore. The Blue Jays already hold one decision over the locals, who as yet have not been relieved of its sting. Maryland and Hopkins love each other like two sore bulldogs nosing into the same piece of meat.

Catholic will get away for its final foreign games during the week-end. On Friday night Coach Rice's players will engage Villanova at Villanova, Pa., and on Saturday night will collide with the powerful City College of New York Five in the metropolis.

St. Frances Team Here to Play Colonials Saturday Night.

St. Francis, of Loretta, Pa., which will be George Washington's opponent Saturday night, has done nothing to make sports writers of the North race about—and probably will fail to do so here. Still, since they are unknown, a good showing is not without the realm of possibility.

Gallaudet will swing back into action on Saturday night against the St. Mary's Celtics in Alexandria. The Silents figure to win.

Here is the week's schedule:

WEDNESDAY—Catholic vs. George Washington at Brookland, Georgetown vs. Navy at Annapolis.

THURSDAY — American vs. Juniata at Huntingdon, Pa.

FRIDAY—American vs. Duquesne at Pittsburgh, Catholic vs. Villanova at Villanova, Pa.

SATURDAY—George Washington vs. St. Francis (Loretta, Pa.), at Georgetown; Maryland vs. Johns Hopkins at Baltimore, Georgetown vs. Temple at Philadelphia, Catholic vs. City College of New York at New York, Gallaudet vs. St. Mary's Celtics at Alexandria.

PITCHER WILLIS WEDS.

Special to The Washington Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Feb. 17.—Charles ("Lefty") Willis, of Leetown, Jefferson County, W. Va., former pitching ace with the local Blue Ridge Baseball Club, later a member of the hurling staff of the Philadelphia Athletics and now with the Milwaukee Club of the American Association, was married Tuesday in Philadelphia to Miss Dorothy Parrist, of Collingswood, N. J., it is learned.

COLLYER'S COMMENT on the SPORT of KINGS

By BEATT for COLLYER

THE Wopsey Tiger. Boys, this gumbo down Noo O'Lens way suits a maverick which has been well hidden right down to the ground. I have reference to FRIEND, a trick given an "airing" over at the Fair Grounds and which goes for all the real kale today. Now, I have known too much gab to spoil the coup; hence I slip you the info with the additional adjuration—wotever-inell that is—to hop aboard.

ONE LONG HOP, which brought home the bacon for us Friday, is to be sent right back. The youngster has drawn a good post position and is a mud running fool. BROD'S BUDDY and ADMIRAL SETH for what is left. The latter was an overnight commission horse.

SCIPIO is another from the old vat and goes in the third. JOHNNY CAMPBELL and LITTLE MINISTER both figure close up, but they are named among the also eligibles and extremely doubtful starters.

Taking a line through the last effort at the Fair Grounds there is no reason to believe that RUANE will not come right back.

By the same token and if you like to shoot a long shot, don't overlook MANZANA. Don't let any one tell you he hasn't a chance to take down all the money, for he has.

Over at Miami where, as we write this, the going is still fast, I am slipping you SENADOR VASQUEZ BELLO. This bird had an awful trip of "herding" last time and seems to stand out here.

The same can be said about TOSSABOUT in the third. A winner last time and this way rigged he figures to win by wide-open daylight.

LEW BLACK is just getting good and seems to favor this track. He is the one to beat.

ROMP, fresh and good from Havana, is the clockers' special. Lamp the gab they append: "VOLANTE is a hard luck horse, while the reverse can be said of ROMP. Stable connections very sanguine," and dat's dat. More anon.

J. C. C. TEAMS VICTORS IN 5 GAMES

Unlimiteds, in Feature, Beat Richmond Five, 46-45.

JEWISH Community Center Basket Ball Teams, coached by Manny Goldfarb, enjoyed a very successful day yesterday, winning in all five games played. One Baltimore and three Richmond teams were numbered among the victims.

The 100-pounders, led by Schaefer, defeated the Jewish Educational Alliance of Baltimore in the curtain raiser, 25 to 19. The 130-pound J. C. C. Flashes, with Korman and Understein leading the attack, downed the Richmond Whirlwinds in a fast encounter, 42 to 30, for their twenty-sixth consecutive victory. The 145-pounders, with a galaxy of collegiate and high school stars, including Natie Newman, Ginberg, Lewis and Fine, easily downed St. Martin's, 59 to 19.

In the semifinal the Jewish Community Center girls defeated Council Neighborhood House of Richmond, Va., by the score of 55 to 14. Little Eva Fishman was a team by herself, scoring no less than 39 points, and Rebecca Kronman played a stellar game on defense.

Unlimited Game Supplies Feature Of Interesting Program.

The final game of the evening supplied the main fireworks. Before the largest crowd that has ever witnessed a game at the center, the unlimited five downed the Richmond Y. M. H. A. Councilors after a great uphill fight by the narrowest of margins, 46 to 45. After trailing, 26 to 13, at half time, the local boys, led by Kramer and Jake Goldblatt, pulled up on even terms at the end of the third period, 34 to 34. During this period Kramer gave one of the greatest exhibitions of goal shooting ever witnessed on the center court, scoring six field goals in rapid succession.

The final period was nip and tuck, although after Kramer made two foul tosses shortly after play had been resumed, to give his mates a 36 to 34 lead, the Washingtonians were never headed, although their slim lead was constantly in danger. With two minutes to play, the locals held a 1-point lead and started to freeze the ball.

Goldblatt Sneaks Down Floor To Score a Field Goal.

The Richmond boys were pulled out of position by these clever stalling tactics, and this temporary lapse enabled Jake Goldblatt, Tech High star to sneak down the floor to take a long pass from Kramer and cinch the battle, although M. King, of the invaders, followed with two foul tosses. Willie King played a scintillating game for the Southerners, both on the offense and defense. King, who incidentally was captain of the Randolph-Macon College basketers this season, continually kept his mates in the running with opportunist shots. He was ably assisted by Kraprin and Wolf.

DE VOS RETURNS TO WARS.

New York, Feb. 17 (U.P.).—Rene de Vos, of Belgium, middleweight contender, will meet Bobby Brown, of Lowell, Mass., in a ten-round bout at St. Nicholas Arena tomorrow night. De Vos is a heavy favorite.

THE GUMPS — A Sweetheart on Parade

Mary looks very chic in a new knee length coat of printed pique — and a full trousered pajama suit —
Mary Gold's wardrobe will be most complete — She will have an outfit for each occasion — Mr. Gold's pocket-book is beginning to look as though it had been walked over by a troop of elephants —
For evening wear nothing could be in better taste than a wrap of gold metal cloth with sable collar —
Her ensemble of chartreuse colored crepe trimed in fox is very new and smart this season —
This graceful evening gown of shell pink is made from small patterned lace and has the smartly dipping hem line —
Henry Ausslinn's heart will beat with pride as they ride side by side on the bridle-path —

BUCK ROGERS, 2429 A. D. — A Strategic Retreat — By Phil Nowlan and Dick Calkins

IT'S LUCKY YOU FOUND US, PARTNER! YOU LOOK DONE OUT.
THANKS! BUT I'M IN A HURRY—
YEAH! LIGHT AND HITCH! WE'LL TAKE CARE O'YE.
GRAB HIM! CUT HIM DOWN!
HEY, YOU! COME BACK HERE!
—AND I HAVE NO JUMPING BELT!
IF I CAN TAKE THEM ON ONE AT A TIME, I'LL HAVE THE SITUATION WELL IN HAND.
HA! I GOTCHA!

ELLA CINDERS—Not Really Engaged — By Bill Conselman and Charlie Plumb

Mr. X gave Ella a beautiful diamond ring, with the understanding that if she wore it in her performance at the theatre their engagement would be consummated—
MISS CINDERS, ELLA, IF I MAY CALL YOU THAT— I SEE THAT YOU ARE STILL WEARING MY RING! THAT MEANS WE ARE ENGAGED, AND I AM BESIDE MYSELF WITH JOY!
CHECK THE CHEERS, MR. X, I'M GOING TO JAR YOUR JUBILANCE! I DIDN'T MEAN TO KEEP IT ON—I—I WAS JUST FASCINATED BY IT! MY THIRD FINGER WAS A ONE-WAY STREET AND I LOST THE REVERSE LEVER!
OH, ELLA, DO YOU REALIZE THE OPPORTUNITY YOU ARE DENYING YOURSELF?
I HAVE PLACED WEALTH, TRAVEL, ROMANCE, AND ADVENTURE AT YOUR FEET— WHY DO YOU HESITATE?
I'VE BEEN POOR SO LONG I DON'T KNOW WHY I HESITATE! BUT PLEASE GIVE MY HEART TIME TO REALIZE WHAT MY LEFT HAND DOETH!
Will Ella finally decide in Mr. X's favor?

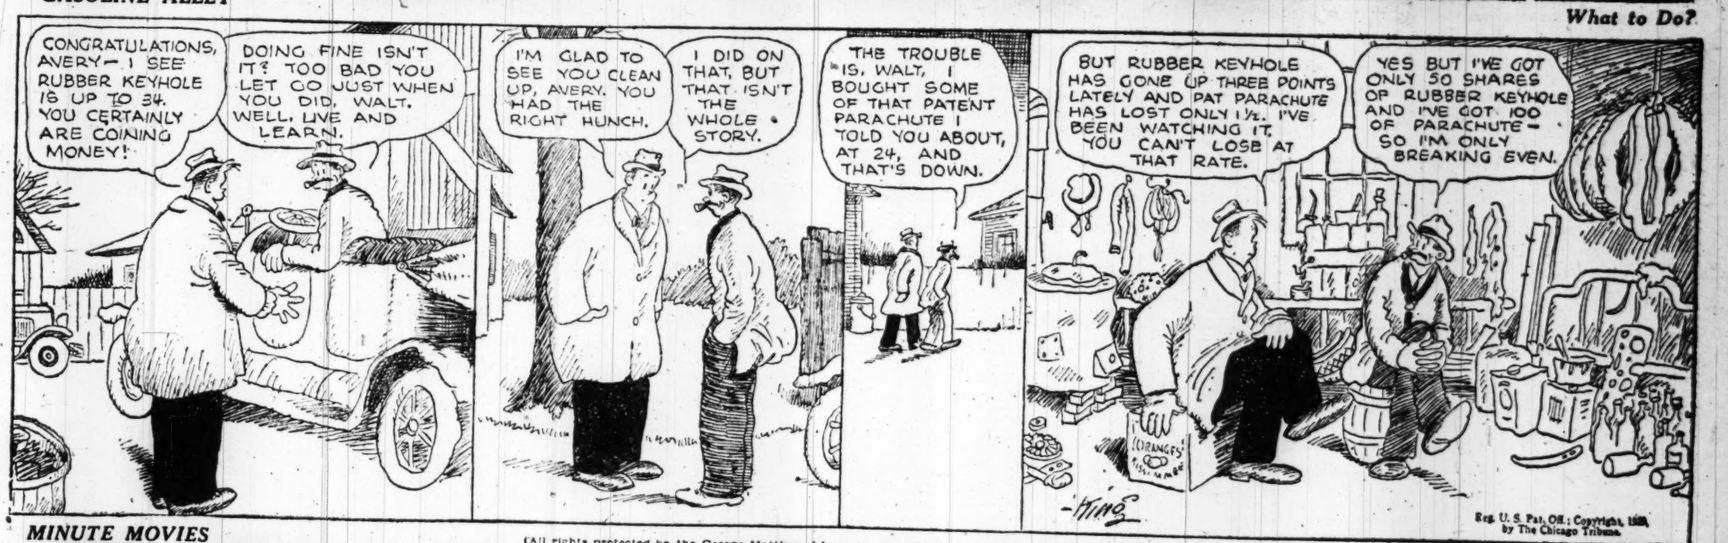
What to Do?

GASOLINE ALLEY — By Frank King



CONGRATULATIONS, AVERY— I SEE RUBBER KEYHOLE IS UP TO 34. YOU CERTAINLY ARE COINING MONEY!
DOING FINE ISN'T IT? TOO BAD YOU LET GO JUST WHEN YOU DID, WALT. WELL, LIVE AND LEARN.
I'M GLAD TO SEE YOU CLEAN UP, AVERY. YOU HAD THE RIGHT HUNCH.
I DID ON THAT, BUT THAT ISN'T THE WHOLE STORY.
THE TROUBLE IS, WALT, I BOUGHT SOME OF THAT PATENT PARACHUTE I TOLD YOU ABOUT, AT 24, AND THAT'S DOWN.
BUT RUBBER KEYHOLE HAS GONE UP THREE POINTS LATELY AND PAT PARACHUTE HAS LOST ONLY 1½. I'VE BEEN WATCHING IT. YOU CAN'T LOSE AT THAT RATE.
YES BUT I'VE GOT ONLY 50 SHARES OF RUBBER KEYHOLE AND I'VE GOT 100 OF PARACHUTE— SO I'M ONLY BREAKING EVEN.

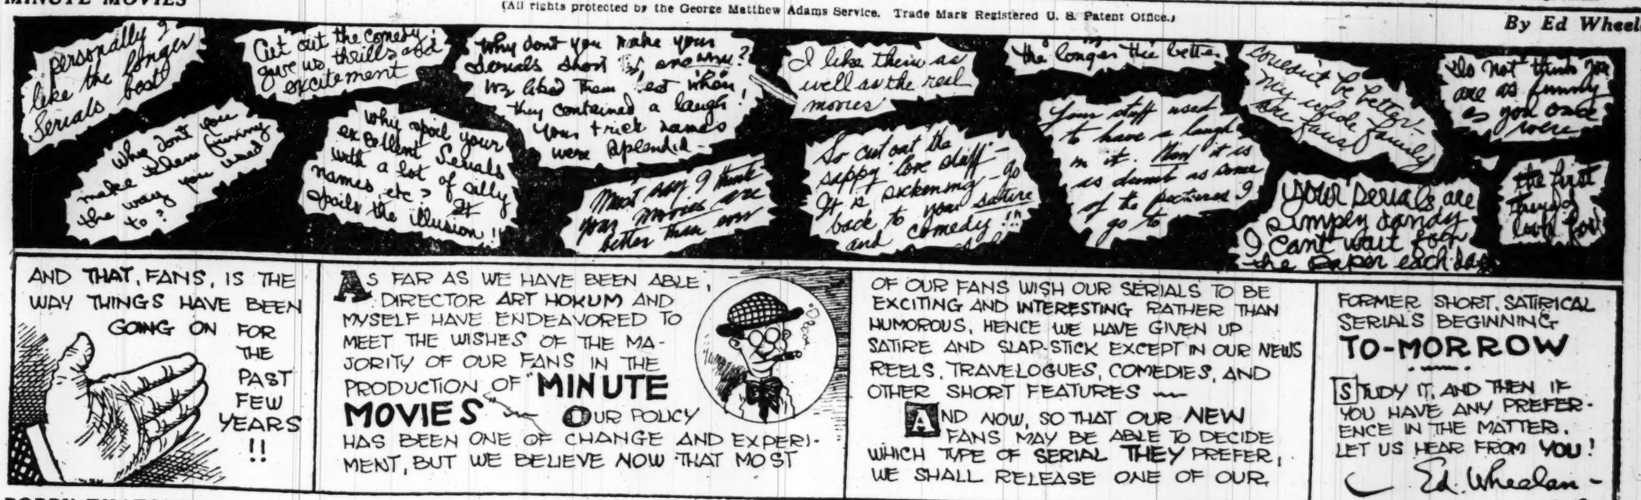
MINUTE MOVIES — By Ed Wheelan

(All rights protected by the George Matthew Adams Service. Trade Mark Registered U. S. Patent Office.)



Personally I like the Serials best
Cut out the Comedy and give us more thrills and excitement
Why don't you make them funnier
Why don't you make your Serials short? We are sorry we ever began them! They contained a laugh! Your trick names were splendid—
I like them as well as the real movies
The longer they get the better
Your stuff used to have a laugh in it. Now it is as dismal as one of the pictures I go to
So cut out the sappy love stuff— It is sickening— Get back to your satire and comedy!!
We do not think you are as funny as you once were
Your Serials are simply dandy— I can't wait for the paper each day
The first three were swell too!
AND THAT, FANS, IS THE WAY THINGS HAVE BEEN GOING ON FOR THE PAST FEW YEARS!!
AS FAR AS WE HAVE BEEN ABLE, DIRECTOR ART HOKUM AND MYSELF HAVE ENDEAVORED TO MEET THE WISHES OF THE MAJORITY OF OUR FANS IN THE PRODUCTION OF "MINUTE MOVIES" — OUR POLICY HAS BEEN ONE OF CHANGE AND EXPERIMENT, BUT WE BELIEVE NOW THAT MOST OF OUR FANS WISH OUR SERIALS TO BE EXCITING AND INTERESTING RATHER THAN HUMOROUS, HENCE WE HAVE GIVEN UP SATIRE AND SLAP-STICK EXCEPT IN OUR NEWS REELS, TRAVELOGUES, COMEDIES, AND OTHER SHORT FEATURES — AND NOW, SO THAT OUR NEW FANS MAY BE ABLE TO DECIDE WHICH TYPE OF SERIAL THEY PREFER, WE SHALL RELEASE ONE OF OUR FORMER SHORT, SATIRICAL SERIALS BEGINNING TO-MORROW STUDY IT, AND THEN IF YOU HAVE ANY PREFERENCE IN THE MATTER, LET US HEAR FROM YOU!

HOW TO KEEP WELL

By DR. W. A. EVANS

ATHLETICS AND LIFE SPAN.

F. W. F. writes: Your "Athletics and the Span of Life," recently, was most interesting and of great moment. Other authorities, chiefly English, go even further than Dr. Dublin and aver that the heavier athletics tend to shorten life.

Possibly too much racing, working under terrific pressure, may not be good for one. But I firmly believe that most vigorous exercise, taken in the formative period of young manhood, is decidedly beneficial (provided that at least moderate exercise and sensible living are kept up all through the remainder of life) and tends to lengthen the span considearbly. I may not have all the insurance tabulations and "keen medical observation" at hand that your authorities have, but I have known so many athletes, and been at it so long and so much that I feel a certain confidence in expressing my opinion.

It seems to me many of you attribute to athletics a responsibility not its own. Shortened lives of former athletes are, I am sure, caused by the later mode of life of those former athletes. Soon after college most of them stop all such active work, which has given them good appetites and accelerated heart and other functions. Usually a jolly lot, they get into gay company and travel a lively pace, grow fat and ill-conditioned, and slide off before their time.

I've rowed on five fairly good crews. One held a world record. We were 40 men of about the same age, and now, at 66, I am the only one left of those 40, and I believe I am also the only one who kept up the work. Today I fence, box, play tennis, row and live as carefully almost as when I was in training. The others whom I've had opportunity to observe soon gave up all exercise, took to autoing, feeding heavily, and some of them hitting a pretty high pace. All that may be because of the associations brought about by athletics, but how can you blame the actual athletic work for their early demise?

A few of us in Washington years ago would indulge in long walks, to Baltimore, for instance, forty miles in a day. There were 12 of us, all about the same age, and here again I am the only one alive. Roosevelt and Gen. Wood were the last to go. One lived a stressed life in politics and indulged in jungle and other feverish trips, and the other spent years in the Philippines. Can you blame their going before their time on exercise?

The real test, it would seem to me, would be to keep tab on a bunch of fellows who have been athletes and who continue to live sanely, and like observation of another bunch of men who also live sanely, but who have not been athletes and do not favor athletics in their later lives, and then make comparisons and wise deductions, &c. But how the dickens can the latter bunch live "sanely" without exercise? That's what bothers me. And, anyhow, the first buneh may not live longer but they live better and enjoy living and feel more fit.

LIVER SPOTS ON HAND.

G. C. S. writes: What does the presence of liver spots on the back of the hand signify?

Is it a sign of old age, liver trouble, or improper diet?

REPLY.

Liver spots on the hands and neck indicate advancing age in almost every case. That's why we hate to see them come.

It is not easy to turn back the hands of the clock. In other words, treatment is generally futile. Constipation, pregnancy and other experiences of life sometimes cause them.

Big Chimes Of London Heard Here

Westminster Bells Send Peals Through KDKA at 7 o'Clock Nightly; Hughes Will Speak for Washington Memorial.

Although no public announcements have been made of it, station KDKA at Pittsburgh is now rebroadcasting the Big Ben time signals from England via 5SW, the Chelmsford short wave station outside of London. Big Ben, chiming the hour of midnight, was recently heard here through station KDKA as the clocks in Washington were striking the hour of 7.

In response to a request from The Post for more information about the tests, the following telegram was received from C. W. Horn, manager of radio operations of the Westinghouse Co., at Pittsburgh:

"KDKA has recently been rebroadcasting British time signals from London by means of short waves. This in connection with experimental work being conducted between the two countries."

This follows two trial rebroadcasts from England by the Radio Corporation of America, the first four years ago and the second a few weeks ago, both of which were heard here. All of it is a part of experiments going on to bring about an international exchange of programs.

Where in this country we broadcast the Arlington time signals by means of dots and dashes, in Great Britain they have hit upon a much more dramatic way of doing it by broadcasting the chiming of Big Ben from the clock towers of the houses of Parliament.

This is one of the largest and most famous bells in the world and by means of radio its deep tones have become known and loved throughout Great Britain.

Mrs. Henry F. Dimock announces completion of arrangements for the broadcasting of the talk next Friday—the night of Washington's Birthday—which Charles Evans Hughes is to make in behalf of the completion of the George Washington Memorial Building in this city.

"After people have learned from Mr. Hughes on Washington's Birthday the importance of going ahead with the memorial project, in order to have it ready by 1932, and as the realization grows that this great Nation approaches the bicentennial anniversary of the birth of the greatest American without possessing a suitable memorial building in his honor, there will be a united urge for the erection of the edifice," Mrs. Dimock said.

"The City of Washington will gain a great deal materially as well as spiritually when this memorial is completed. First, Washington will possess a building which will be second to none in the world from the standpoints of architectural beauty and utility. The memorial, at Sixth and B streets, will add its splendor to the group of buildings planned by the Government for the Mall development.

"Also, the memorial will give Washington what the city has needed for many years—a large auditorium. The memorial auditorium, seating 14,000, will make Washington the premier convention city of America. Washington has all the necessary attractions now except one, a suitable meeting place. When this memorial auditorium is available, many conventions and conclaves, commercial, business, social and religious, will hold their annual meetings in this city."

Mr. Hughes will make his appeal from New York over a nation-wide chain of stations and will be heard locally over Station WRC. The address will be given at 7:30 o'clock.

The Federated Radio Trade Association, composed of those who sell and service radio receivers and equipment throughout the Nation, will open its convention in Buffalo today and among those to attend from Washington will be Frank D. Scott, counsel for the Radio Manufacturers Association, who will address the gathering.

"The Trade Association, under whose banners the entire distributing end of the industry is grouped, plans to inaugurate a program of service to fans which will match the recently announced plans of the Radio Manufacturers Association to give more radio for the dollar than ever before," he said yesterday.

"This is to be accomplished by instructing rado men in radio theory and practice in much the same way as is done by the radio men in Milwaukee."

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST

INEVITABLE.

Oh, spend this life for what you will
Few things you gain will stay,
Despite the fortune gathered, still
In time your hair will gray;
Win fame, and still upon your brow
Time's furrows will appear,
And on your cheeks you must allow
Grief's hot and cruel tear.

Though cleverness you may attain
And practice bring you skill,
The sting and ache of human pain
Shall find your body still,
And though you scoff at humble men
As proudly as you please,
The power you boast shall fall you when You're stricken by disease.

There's naught that man shall take away,
Of all that he receives,
The mightiest man shall reach the day
When everything he leaves;
The golden hair shall turn to gray,
The cheek now pink shall fade,
And everyone who lives today
Shall pass death's barricade.

So walk with open eyes this earth
And read man's life aright,
Death waits for all who come to birth
And weakness follows might;
So let not conquest make you vain
Nor treasures strike you blind,
The triumphs mortal hands attain
The spirit leaves behind.

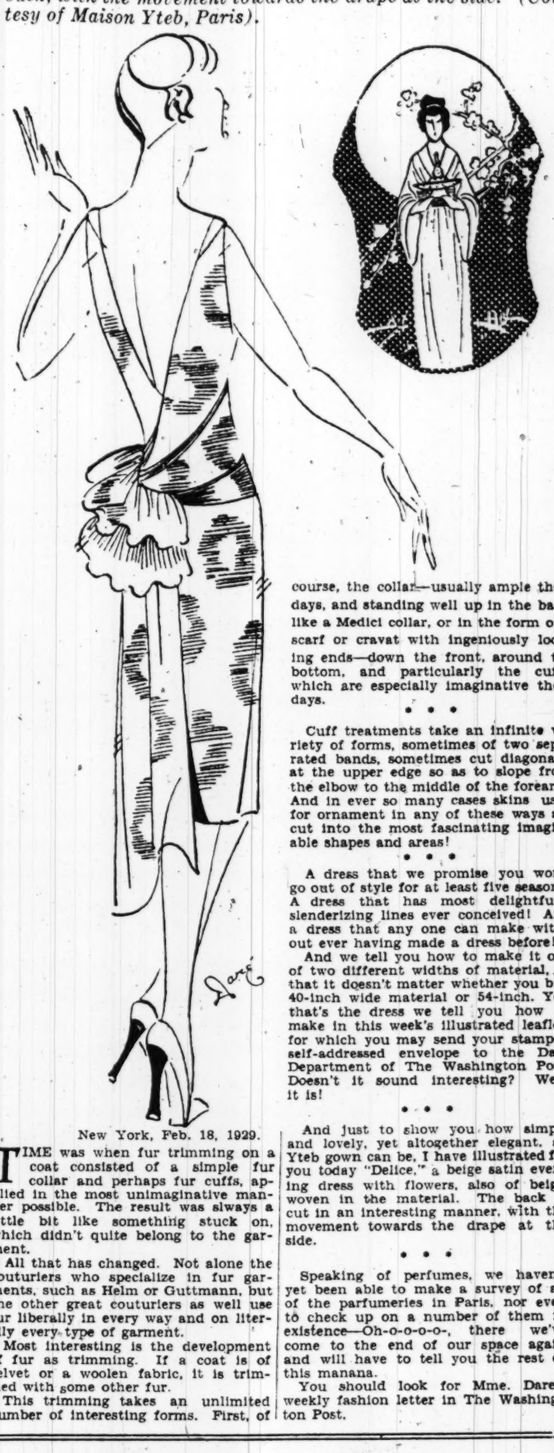
Jane INTERPRETS the MODE

"Delice," a simple yet elegant evening gown of beige satin, with beige flowers woven in the material. Notice the cut of the back, with the movement towards the drape at the side. (Courtesy of Maison Yteb, Paris).



New York, Feb. 18, 1929.

TIME was when fur trimming on a coat consisted of a simple fur collar and perhaps fur cuffs, applied in the most unimaginative manner possible. The result was always a little bit like something stuck on, which didn't quite belong to the garment.

All that has changed. Not alone the couturiers who specialize in fur garments, such as Helm or Guttmann, but the other great couturiers as well use fur liberally in every way and on literally every type of garment.

Most interesting is the development of fur as trimming. If a coat is of velvet or a woolen fabric, it is trimmed with some other fur.

This trimming takes an unlimited number of interesting forms. First, of course, the collar—usually ample these days, and standing well up in the back, like a Medici collar, or in the form of a scarf or cravat with ingeniously looping ends—down the front, around the bottom, and particularly the cuffs, which are especially imaginative these days.

Cuff treatments take an infinite variety of forms, sometimes of two separated bands, sometimes cut diagonally at the upper edge so as to slope from the elbow to the middle of the forearm. And in ever so many cases skins used for ornament in any of these ways are cut into the most fascinating imaginable shapes and areas!

A dress that we promise you won't go out of style for at least five seasons! A dress that has most delightfully slenderizing lines ever conceived! And a dress that any one can make without ever having made a dress before!

And we tell you how to make it out of two different widths of material, so that it doesn't matter whether you buy 40-inch wide material or 54-inch. Yes, that's the dress we tell you how to make in this week's illustrated leaflet, for which you may send your stamped self-addressed envelope to the Dare Department of The Washington Post. Doesn't it sound interesting? Well, it is!

And just to show you how simple and lovely, yet altogether elegant, an Yteb gown can be, I have illustrated for you today "Delice," a beige satin evening dress with flowers, also of beige, woven in the material. The back is cut in an interesting manner, with the movement towards the drape at the side.

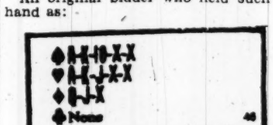
WORK ON BRIDGE

THIS article is intended for the Bridge novice.

A two-suiter (that is, a hand containing two suits, each of five cards or more) is a very powerful holding when both suits are strong. Its holder should try to find out in which of the two suits his partner is the longer and play with that suit the trump. It is quite usual for an original bidder to have two suits of equal length and of practically equal strength, but it would be exceptional to find the two-suiter's partner equally long and strong in the same two suits.

An original bidder who held such a hand as:



would have little choice, as far as his own hand was concerned, between the two Major suits; but the success of the deal is apt to depend upon selecting the Major in which partner is longer. The only way to insure obtaining the right trump is to force the partner to select it.

Referring to the hand above given; suppose that partner held Queen and three others in one Major, and a singleton in the other. Obviously it would make the greatest difference which was the trump. Even when the difference in the partner's hand is not so great (for example, three small cards in one suit and two in the other), is it important that the trump should be the suit in which the partner is the longer.

An original bidder who has two possible suit-bids with no preponderance of length and strength in one of them, should bid first the higher-valued and later (if he have a second chance) the lower-valued; thus giving his partner the choice between the two.

In the above hand Dealer should bid one Spade and, if either adversary or partner bid a Minor, should then bid Hearts and give partner the opportunity to choose between the two Majors without increasing the size of the contract. If the bidding should be: Dealer one Spade followed by two passes and two Clubs by Fourth Hand, Dealer would bid two Hearts and, if Second Hand passed, partner would pass on the second round if he preferred Spades. Bidding two Spades would not be a raise under the circumstances; it would be merely expressing a preference for Spades rather than Hearts.

Military Mass Held To Celebrate Crusades

The Crusades to the Holy Land were commemorated yesterday morning at the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, when hundreds of members of the Catholic Students' Mission Crusade and a cadet battalion of St. John's College attended military mass.

The Rev. Louis C. Vaeth, director of propagation of the faith, was the celebrant of the mass. He was assisted by the Rev. J. Lawrence Kilkenny, deacon, and the Rev. Thomas J. Shahan, of the Holy Cross Academy.

Greenland—Parent of Icebergs.

THE ISLAND called Greenland sends out thousands of icebergs which float on the north Atlantic every year. Let us see how those icebergs are "shoved off."

In the first place let us remember that Greenland has a poor name. There is very little green on the whole island, except in summer at a few points along the southern coast. Most of the island is covered with snow and ice during the entire year.

Sketch of an iceberg, showing what a large part "rides" under water.

There are reasons to believe that the climate of Greenland was not so cold ages ago. One reason is that there are valleys on the island which must have been made by rivers.

Many of Greenland valleys are now choked up with what we call "valley glaciers." Another name for them might be "moving rivers of ice," for the ice moves, though very slowly. Some of the valley glaciers move only 1 or 2 feet a day. Others travel from 18 to 20 feet a day.

The ice of the valley glaciers is pushed toward the sea. After it is shoved out into the water, huge chunks break off and float. These chunks become what we call icebergs.

So we see that an iceberg is a large chunk of ice, frozen from snow which has been melted by pressure while in a glacier. If you take a chip from an iceberg and let it melt, you find that the water is fresh, not salty.

Icebergs float because they are lighter than water, but the greater part of each one is under water. In fact eight-ninths of the weight of an iceberg is beneath the surface of the water.

The tops of icebergs have many shapes, and they have been compared to "dazzling white chalk cliffs" and to "floating palaces." Sometimes they rise to great heights. There are cases on record where the part out of water was equal in height to a 15-story building.

Greenland is not the only parent of icebergs. There are bergs which break off from valley glaciers of Siberia and other places along the coasts of the Arctic ocean. Yet Greenland is justly famed as the source of most of the icebergs which float on the Atlantic and which form a danger to ships which take northern lanes.

Wives of Tomorrow

By FRANCES M'DONALD

"Reverence."

HOW soon will the world turn once more to reverence? Now that women have at last decided to tone down voices, and trail chiffon scarfs, will men and women alike cease passing and scoffing and revert to the old-time thoughts and ways?

On a recent sea voyage during a storm some one with a genius for the inopportune, started a discussion of life after death, and strangely not one person present tried to be funny. Of course, it may have been the angle at which the good ship was battling the waves, but I believe it was the new leaning toward reverence for the mysteries beyond the grave. Listening one could scarcely agree with the writer of the following letter who believes that reverence is dear and gone forever.

Dear Miss McDonald: How can the young generation expect to find happiness? Have you noticed their attitude toward everything that makes life true and fine? Get a crowd of them together, and listen in when some one speaks out of turn and mentions God, truth, virtue, or even death.

They have no respect for anything on earth. They cop the cynicism they see about them, and if they do find in themselves a fleeting semblance of reverance for anything or anbody, they swiftly proceed to camouflage it with a wise crack. I attended a very modern wedding about a month ago, and the bride announced that she had picked the lawyer who was to get her divorce when she needed one. This made a big hit with all present, and yells of "Atta girl" filled the air. There is not the least question but she will need that lawyer within five years, for neither she nor her partner have the faintest trace of stamina, or sense of responsibility. They are each self-centered to a point of being totally unconscious of the fact that others have rights. And they are just average. At their wedding they behaved as if on any "joy party." Now, how can you get happiness out of that?"

And, of course, it is sad. But these two young heathen are not average. The average girl is not flippant on her wedding day. And even this girl who was, may surprise all her friends with her constancy. Certainly the past two years has seen a vast change in the girl who wanted to be a man in 1927. She has gone womanly. And when woman goes womanly I, for one, believe that reverence has a chance.

YOUR BOY AND YOUR GIRL

By ARTHUR DEAN, SC. D.
The Parent Counselor.

In Front of My Fire.

IT is getting late, and it's a bit chilly. Besides, I am about to dial my favorite station. The big arm chair is drawn up in front of the fireplace. The wastepaper baskets of a days' mail have been emptied. I touch a letter near the bottom with a lighted match.

A fire of hope, ambition, love and despair is blazing. A fire of vocational careers, jealousy, its hates, happiness and a whole range of problems of life and living.

There are beautiful green spots of flame in the fire as though I were burning driftwood from old copper-riveted ships which had sailed the seven seas. Is it the ink, or the paper, or the thoughts which are making that spot in the fire green? Is it envy and jealousy? Or is it a letter from some girl who has the love of nature in her heart and wants to be a forest ranger? Or some boy who loves the out-of-doors, with its solitude, more than he loves the parties, petting and puerility?

Ah, there's a red hot flame! That must be the letter from the woman who said I was an old fogey because I wanted parents to be in by 10:30 p. m. Of course it was an unwise remark because naturally we should get our children to come in early even if we do not set them a good example. You see we parents think we have a right to expect that our children will go to bed in good season whether we do or not. We parents have such queer ways, haven't we?

There are some letters that do not seem to want to burn. I will use the poker and stir up that part of the pile a bit. Why don't they burn? Is it that they are bitter and selfish? I wonder what makes people bitter—is it because nobody loves them, or is it because they love nobody? Are we bitter because we are not loved, or are we bitter because we have loved too much or too unwisely?

There's a letter burning fitfuly and twisting and curling in the burning. That must be one of those inferiority complex letters where the soul that wrote it was in conflict with herself or with the world. Or perhaps she just thinks she is because she has been pampered and babied so much that everybody else is out of step with her. Perhaps some one has hurt her dreadfully.

Then those letters which are already torn to bits. I must see that every piece is burned to ashes because they contain secrets which the world must never know. Some of them begin with: "I know you will laugh at me when I tell you," but if they only knew me they would not have said that. Or perhaps it was a letter which began: "Because you are the father of all I am telling you my difficulties." It is such a letter which gives me courage and strength to go on. Or was it a letter starting with: "I am telling you because I cannot tell my mother?" And a letter like this makes me angry, not at the child, boy or girl, who wrote it, but at the mother. Why can't she tell her mother? Why can't he tell his father?

The fire is dead. The station announcer has said: "Good-night." My dog is punching me with his nose as a reminder of our midnight stroll before the sandman comes.

OUR CONVERSATION CORNER.

Terror at Night.

What is the cause of night terrors?

READER.

Answer—"Night terrors" are logical outcomes of mental processes which are suppressed by the ordinary experiences of waking life. The child, fearing ridicule, will not betray his fear of the "great bear" or the "bogey man" when in association with his parents or companions. The presence of others is adequate to prevent those processes finding expression in behavior. In the hours of sleep the sights and sounds which prevent the expression of the feeling during the day are ineffective, and the child gives expression to his fear by screams of terror. The cure for night terrors is to analyze the child's fundamental fears and then readjust the child's attitude. The enclosed leaflet on "Fear" is with my compliments.

Future Citizen.

These words were given by a little boy who came home from his first day at school and reported it to his parents: "I pledge a legion to my flag, and to the Republicans for which it stands; one nation, with invisible liberty and justice for all." Doesn't it show poor teaching?

ECCENTRICUS.

Answer—The boy, of course, has heard the word "legion" and not allegiance. The word "Republicans" was familiar, "republic" was not. Too much rote teaching combining slovenly enunciation develops this type of mind.

FIRE NOT TO HALT INAUGURAL PARADE, WATSON DECLARES

Chief Will Divide Apparatus on Each Side of Avenue During Pageant.

DANCE POSTER ARTISTS WILL GET PRIZES TODAY

Civil War Veterans of Home in Mississippi to March; Rescue Squads to Serve.

Fires have the reputation of being able to stop almost anything; but even a fire will not stop the inaugural parade. Announcement was made by the Fire Department yesterday that no fire apparatus will cross the line of march—that is unless some of the parade itself catches on fire.

Fire Chief George S. Watson has worked out a system through which the outbreak of fire will be well looked after without any interference with the inauguration of Herbert Hoover and Charles H. Curtis. Apparatus stationed north of the avenue will respond to fires on the north side, and apparatus south of Pennsylvania avenue will answer fire alarms south of the avenue, Chief Watson said. This will avoid crossing the line of march, which would require dispersing of street crowds and letting down of police rope lines at the intersections.

Rescue Squads to Be Ready.

The inaugural this year will be the first in which fire rescue squads will participate. They will keep their regular stations, and will be assisted by ambulances from the various hospitals, stationed near the line of march. So it is apparent that although the Fire Department is determined to keep out of the path of the parade that it will be in readiness in case anything really serious occurs. Incidentally, never in the history of inaugurations has a fire apparatus interrupted a parade. Chief Watson believes that such a record is bound to be broken sooner or later and he is determined that every precaution will be taken this year not to stop the parade even if a fire does break out.

While the outdoor end of the inauguration is receiving all this attention, the indoor activities—such as the ball—are also maintaining a good pace. At 11 o'clock this morning the four young Washington artists who designed the winning posters in a contest conducted by the inaugural charity ball committee will be presented with cash awards at the Transportation Building. The four winners are T. M. Hood, Love Bragaw, Harriette Byrd and Florence Leighty, all students of the Felix Mahoney Art School. Their posters were selected from among 70 others submitted in the contest.

Posters to Advertise Ball.

The posters are to be used in advertising the charity ball to be held in the Washington auditorium on the night of March 4.

Each day that brings the inauguration nearer brings the news of the adding of fresh contingents to the line of march. The latest addition, announced last night, will be the formation of twenty veterans of the Civil War from the Jefferson Davis Confederate Home at Beauvoir, Miss. They will be escorted to Washington by Elnathan Tartt, superintendent of the home. The home was once the residence of Jefferson Davis, president of the confederacy.

A report was received last night that the Hoover Overseas and War Organization has engaged 40 rooms at the Hotel Martinique. This delegation includes men and women identified with the Hoover overseas work, as well as later activities of the Hoover forces. The delegation will invade the Hotel Martinique on March 2 and hold reunion exercises prior to the inauguration.

CHEST NOMINATIONS WILL BE MADE TODAY

Committee to Prepare List Representing Contributors to Charity Fund.

ANNUAL MEETING IS OFF

Members of the Community Chest nominating committee, selected at the recent meeting of the executive committee, will meet this morning to nominate candidates for the board of trustees representing contributor members. The nominating committee consists of Arthur C. Moses, chairman; William Knowles Cooper, Arthur May, Rabbi William F. Rosenblum and Mrs. Thomas E. Robertson. Suggestions as to persons to be nominated for this list will be welcomed.

Owing to the large number of contributors and the consequent expense in getting them together, the executive committee has decided that no annual meeting will be held this year. Ballots will be sent to each contributor to vote for the elected members of the board of trustees, one for each two members selected by the various agencies affiliated with the Chest. The new board of trustees will meet some time next month and elect officers for the ensuing year.

Nominations by the nominating committee are not limited to the number of trustees to be elected and additional nominations may be caused by petitions signed by five or more contributing members. The ballots will be secret and the list of nominees will be printed so that each voter can select the total number of elected members from the list furnished.

The result of the election will be certified to the director of the Chest by the tellers making the count and the director will announce the results.

RELIEF PLAN HEARD BY CHURCH SOCIETY

St. Vincent de Paul Members Told of Charity Work in Eight Parishes.

MEETING FOLLOWS MASS

Reports on work done by 20 member conferences of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, and discussion of future plans were heard by members at the quarterly meeting held yesterday at 8 a. m. in St. Joseph's Church, Second and C streets northeast.

The business meeting followed celebration of mass and breakfast served by the ladies of the parish. Dr. John O'Grady, director of Catholic Charities in Washington; the Rev. Edward J. McAdams, pastor of St. Joseph's Church, and Allen Pope, of the Sacred Heart Conference, addressed the meeting.

Dr. O'Grady announced that after a series of conferences it had been decided that material relief would be taken care of by individual parishes in each of the following: St. Paul's, St. Martin's, St. Joseph's, St. Patrick's, St. Anthony's, Holy Trinity's, St. Matthews' and St. Augustine's. Dr. O'Grady will report to each quarterly meeting the progress made by each parish.

It was pointed out that each member conference takes care of its own poor and that the society's rule of secrecy in matters of charity would not allow its followers to become partakers in the Community Chest fund recently carried to successful close in the city.

George J. Cleary, president of the particular council of the society, presided at the meeting. The large attendance drew favorable comment from the Rev. Mr. McAdams. Remarks also were made by Mr. Cleary, Mr. Pope, William H. DeLacy and John Hadley Doyle.

Sisters Sleep at Show As Mother Asks Search

Two children, sisters, who went to a moving picture theater and fell asleep, yesterday afternoon caused several hours of consternation to their mother, who appealed to the Women's Bureau of the Police Department to locate them. They were Virginia and Georgia Satirios, 7 and 8 years old, respectively, of 308 Sixth street southwest.

The girls left home about 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and when they failed to return by 6 Mrs. Satirios became alarmed and called the police. Shortly after 7 o'clock the children walked into their home and told their anxious family that they had been to a theater and had fallen asleep.

Sunday Closing Laws Hit by Forum Speaker

Teamwork in opposition to Sunday closing laws was urged by Dr. Joseph A. Thomper, president of the National Association Opposed to Blue Laws, in an address yesterday before the Washington Open Forum, 808 I street northwest.

"It is not enough for isolated or sectarian groups to fight Sunday blue laws," he asserted. "Seventh Day Adventists, Freethinkers and others do excellent work in their own fields, but each is limited. Our need is unity, cooperation and teamwork."

7 Boys Arrested In Bicycle Thefts

Captures Expected to Explain Vanishing of Machines in Northwest.

Just where bicycles go when they disappear from small boys' homes in the Northwest section was believed to have been discovered last night when police from the Eighth Precinct, led by Sergt. Callahan, arrested seven young colored boys in a back room at 1352 Wallack street northwest.

The boys were found in the act of dismantling one of the machines, and there were five others in the place, police said. The boys arrested and taken to the House of Detention described themselves as Charles Minor, 16, of 1346 Wallack street northwest; Sam Poole, 10, of 1320 U street northwest, apartment 3; Howard Berry, 15, of 1305 Corcoran street northwest; Wilbur Shore, 15, of 1809 Twelfth street northwest; Howard Gordon, 13, of 1330 U street northwest; Milton Wood, 11, of 1308 U street northwest, and Theodore Thompson, age and address not reported.

The policeman was relieved of his equipment, suspended from duty and locked up at the Ninth Precinct Station, pending arraignment in court this morning.

JANET COON GUEST OF MARY PICKFORD AT PICKFAIR PARTY

Capital Contest Winner Is Thrilled at Tea Where Stars Are Present.

ATTENDS NEW COURSE AT WHISTLING SCHOOL

Trip Through Studio Is Big Event Today; Leaves for Home Tomorrow.

Special to The Washington Post.

Hollywood, Calif., Feb. 17.—Mary Pickford was "at home" today in her beautiful residence Pickfair in honor of the 25 contest winners and 25 newspaper women from many parts of the Union who are in Hollywood as her guests.

Miss Pickford was assisted in receiving by her husband, Douglas Fairbanks, and notables from screenland were at the tea tables and mingled with the guests in merry conversation. Douglas Fairbanks, jr., and his reputed fiancee, Janet Coon, The Washington Post winner, and a group of friends posed for their pictures on the edge of the bathing pool in front of Pickfair and inspected at will the curios Miss Pickford and her husband have brought back from their rambles in all parts of the world.

Tea Served on Lawn.

Miss Pickford and Mr. Fairbanks were here, there and everywhere talking, laughing, tuning in the radio, playing the victrola and looking after the happiness and comfort of the guests in every way. Tea was served under the trees on the lawn. Miss Pickford presided behind the massive tea service.

As the automibiles filled with cheering contest winners rode slowly down the roadway Miss Pickford and Mr. Fairbanks stood in the doorway of Pickfair waiving "good-by" until the last contest winner was out of sight.

Tonight Miss Janet Coon, The Washington Post contest winner, was the guest of honor at a recital given by America's bird whistling chorus, which was also attended by her grace, the Duchess of Hamilton president of the Animal Defense and Antivivisection Society of England. A special trio of bird songs was introduced into the program for Miss Coon's special benefit at the suggestion of Miss Agnes Woodward, director of the chorus and founder of the only whistling school in the world, which is located in Los Angeles.

Takes Whistling Course.

Tomorrow Miss Coon will be given an intensive course in whistling the California bird songs at this school, after which she will rejoin the party and visit the Paramount-Famous Players-Lasky studio. There the Mary Pickford girls will be greeted by the studio executives and escorted through the magic land of the huge lot after which they will lunch with Paramount stars, including Clara Bow, Adolphe Menjou, Buddy Rogers, Richard Arlen, Emil Jannings, Maurice Chevalier and others.

Tuesday morning Miss Pickford will say farewell to her guests at the Santa Fe Station as the "Coquette Special" departs, bearing 25 happy girls to Chicago—and home.

In addition to Washington, cities of six States—Maryland, Pennsylvania, Delaware, West Virginia, Michigan and Ohio—will be represented. Interests common to all will be taken up at the general meetings and group meetings that have been arranged. Group meetings will be preceded by luncheons to be given by Mrs. Cary Grayson, Mrs. Frederick Brooke, Mrs. Benjamin Thoron, Miss Anne Devereaux, Miss Mary Hale and Mrs. David St. Pierre Gaillard.

Mrs. Walter Edge, wife of Senator Edge, of New Jersey, president of the Washington League, will welcome the visiting leaguers.

Kay Is Fourth Jeweler To Be Robbed in 4 Days

Robbers broke the show window of the Kay Jewelry Co., 407 Seventh street northwest, about 10:40 o'clock yesterday morning and stole jewelry on display valued at $181.52, police reported yesterday. The loot consisted of watches and one gold ring.

Yesterday morning was the fourth consecutive morning on which a jewelry store robbery has been reported to police.

Fire Damage at Store, $1,000.

Damage estimated at between $800 and $1,000 last night resulted from a fire in the dry goods store of Andrew Peternan, at 1268 Four-and-a-half street southwest. A defective flue is believed by Battalion Chief A. C. Buscher, who was in command of the fire fighters, to have caused the blaze.

THE NEW WEEK'S BILLS

METROPOLITAN

"MY MAN." A Warner Bros. production with songs and dialogue, starring Fannie Brice. Directed by Archie L. Mayo. Reviewed Sunday afternoon by Mary Porter Russell.

"My Man" is one of those pictures destined to be acclaimed by thousands and denounced by hundreds. It all depends on the point of view. Judge by the degree of excellence with which Miss Brice's voice and personality have been recorded, it is a huge success; from the standpoint of cohesiveness and dramatic worth of its story it is an equally huge failure.

The first attitude would seem the fairer and it is undoubtedly the more popular. It will be enough for Fannie Brice addicts—and potential addicts—that Fannie is, first of all, herself. The screen has taken from her none of her warm humanness, none of the limitless capacity for fun-making that have distinguished her on the stage, and she has brought with her, from the stage, a repertoire of songs and monologues that have won her her greatest fame.

"My Man," of course, is the outstanding song, and to me it is the most effective thing she has ever done. She imbues it with a depth of feeling, with a plaintive, yet fierce despair that surpasses in artistry all of her excellent comedy numbers.

It was not an easy matter to embody in a play ways and means for Fannie to stop the story every ten minutes to give her offerings. Perhaps it was necessary to make her a seamstress, with stage ambitions, constantly called upon to perform by her fatuous associates, to have her realize her longings and do more performing before a hysterically enthusiastic first-night audience. Perhaps it was necessary, for that matter, to make her the unbelievably long-suffering and doting sister of an impossibly wicked little blonde, who steals, if you haven't guessed it, "my man." There had to be some cause for the emotion with which she sings the song, just as Al Jolson's little boy had to die before he could sing "Sonny Boy." Those things are sad, of course, but when a song is at stake they can't be helped.

It does seem, however, that something might have been done to still the musical accompaniment during the sequence when it was in the way, and that the pictured audience might have been less rapturous in their appreciation of Fannie's gifts. We hope she didn't expect us to act that way, too.

Edna Murphy, as the sister, is excellent in an extraordinarily unsympathetic role. Guinn ("Big Boy") Williams, a recruit, I believe, from the Westerns, does good work, too, as the man in the case, and Andre de Segurola, Richard Tucker, Clarisso Selwynne and Arthur Hoyt contribute authoritative characterizations.

There is a newsreel sandwiched in between the showings of the picture and the period of intermission is further enlivened by Fannie's voice lilting out from the darkness. It is "My Man" that she sings.

NATIONAL

England and Scotland formed the setting for the fifth of the series of Travel-talks with which E. M. Newman closed his Washington season at the National yesterday afternoon. This particular lecture maintained the high standard of interest set by his previous offerings and, measured by the practical yardstick of comparative volumes of applause, was perhaps the most popular of the talks he has delivered here this year.

Perhaps the popularity of this offering was based on the well-known theory that audiences are most interested in those things which are connected with their personal experiences. Doubtless that explains why every one who has ever listened to or recited nursery jingles was attracted by a picture of the famous Banbury Cross, even though the equally famous cock horse was not visible.

Then in the Scottish scenes there were pictures of golf in its native lair. For those whose tastes run to the more serious aspects of history there were views of Canterbury, Stratford-on-Avon, of Holyrood and Sterling Castles with their reminders of the romantic tragedy linked with the story of Mary Queen of Scots.

Throughout the lecture Mr. Newman managed to maintain that atmosphere of peaceful civilization, based on institutions which have passed beyond the experimental stage, which is one of the main charms of the British Isles. Almost, it might be said, the Travel-talk pointed a moral for the more feverish of present-day innovators, a moral which needless to say, will be disregarded as further proof of its soundness.

THE STRAND

Two shows in one has now come to be the system at the Strand, so that if the average burlesque fan doesn't like one he most assuredly will like the other. This week Harry Strouse's "Frivolities" occupies the stage, and Charles "Bimbo" Davis divides honors with Tangara, a shimmy shaker of no mean ability.

Old timers will recall Davis as a comedian who plays the boob—and how! Tangara, billed as a classical dancer, is all that and more. Tangara certainly knows her terpsichore as well as her onions. She set the boys wild last night, and no mistake.

Others who have parts in the merry merry are Fred Neeley, an eccentric comedian; Adelaide Parks, soubrette; James Hall, who plays the straight man, one of the necessaries of a burlesque show; Johnny Cook, a likeable juvenile, and Jean Fox, with lots of pep and personality, the ingenue.

PALACE

"WILD ORCHIDS." A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sound picture, starring Greta Garbo, supported by Lewis Stone and Nils Asther. Directed by Sidney Franklin. Reviewed Saturday night by Mary Porter Russell.

It was by no means a reflection on the entertainment offered by the larger of Loew's houses that some of us found ourselves submerged Saturday night by occasional waves of desolation. If this last of the Greta Garbo pictures had displayed the divine one's talents to poor advantage, perhaps we could have been more philosophical concerning her return to Sweden. But never, it seemed, had she been so bafflingly alluring. The question kept recurring, "When will we see her again?" and the answer, grown more doleful with each repetition, "Maybe nevermore."

There is no other Greta Garbo. She can be classed neither with the cuties nor the beauties nor the sweet young things of Hollywood. Violets there are among the stars, and roses, and gay little daffodils—sunflowers, too, if you must be like that—but Greta is the only orchid.

"You are like the cold, beautiful orchids of your country," the Javanese prince tells her in the play, "but in my country the orchids grow wild." Transplanted orchids can become wild, too, we learn, and therein lies the story.

Just where "Wild Orchids" was made will doubtless remain among the things unknown. It was enough for me that it took me to Java, even though it did not take the cast. I left San Francisco on a Pacific liner with a Mr. and Mrs. John Sterling, and did not return to America until the lights came on and the orchestra in and the outgoing and incoming crowds reached a meeting place on my toes.

It was a colorful and absorbingly interesting journey. There were the enchanting young Mrs. Sterling and her typical business-man husband. And there was also the prince, a cruel, crafty and charming prince. With their meeting came the premonition of an impending catastrophe; with their arrival in Java came the conviction of tragedy. The air was tense with the woman's struggle against a hateful fascination, with the husband's plans for a sickening revenge. And during all of it there was the feel of the East. There were dances and chants by the natives; there were gorgeous palaces and hunting lodges and jungles and tigers. Unexpectedly, happiness came in the end, but it was not a forced happiness. Our orchid didn't grow quite wild and the revenge found itself tempered with mercy.

Nils Asther, as the Prince de Grace, has a role admirably adapted to his talents, while the ever-reliable Lewis Stone brings to his interpretation of the husband a plentiful supply of distinction, poise and humor. Quite worthy of attention, both of them, when Miss Garbo isn't around.

After the exit march has subsided and the audible and silent newsreels have made known the events of the day, the curtain rises on a bizarre setting from which pep and fun are poured forth by Mr. Eddy and the syncopators; Johnnie Perkins, a rotund comedian; Six Lucky Boys, astonishing acrobats; Cunningham and Clements, dancers; Miss Lewis, vocalist, and the Dave Gould Girls. The revue is well balanced, and notable for a fan scene of exceptional beauty. "Varieties of 1929" is the title, if that matters.

COLUMBIA

"THE TRAIL OF '98." A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sound picture based on Robert Service's epic of the North, featuring Dolores del Rio, Ralph Forbes and Karl Dane. Directed by Clarence Brown. Reviewed Saturday night by W. A. Whitney.

The lure of gold and fabulous millions, to be had by merely picking up the yellow nuggets, is powerfully depicted in this offering.

On July 14, 1897, the news of striking gold in the Klondike reached San Francisco and started one of the most famous gold rushes in the annals of mankind. Drawing a heterogeneous conglomeration of souls from all quarters of the country, shipload after shipload of gold-mad men and women went to the Alaskan coast, thence overland to Dawson City. Among the seekers is Berna, who becomes the object for the love of two men; Larry, a gallant youth searching for his fortune, and Jocko Lecasto, a gambler, also in search of his. Larry makes an attempt to strike a rich claim but is unsuccessful. Undaunted, however, by this failure, he makes a second attempt which is crowned with success. On his return to Dawson, he finds that Berna has been forced to become a dancer in the saloon-dance hall, reduced to that position by Lecasto. To right this injustice, Larry ferrets out the villain and with him engages in fisticuffs, resulting in the throwing of a lighted lamp, which sets fire, eventually, to the entire city.

As Berna, Dolores del Rio turns in an excellent piece of acting which can not but enhance her reputation. Ralph Forbes, as Larry, leaves little to be desired as an acceptable lover of Berna. What little comedy relief there is is furnished by Karl Dane as the awkward Swede. The treachery forced by the insane desire for gold is forcibly portrayed by George Cooper, whose death scene is a masterpiece of character acting. Tully Marshall, Harry Cary and Tenen Holtz also offer excellent portrayals of their roles.

The use of daubs of yellow color to represent the gold enhances the effectiveness of the picture. The shots of old San Francisco, those of the boat and those of the hazardous Arctic trails are most effectively done.

The entire picture is synchronized with a Movietone accompaniment which, for the most part, is well done but for vocal spasms of the theme song that are interpolated for no reason at all. In the arduous mountain treks another melody is used in the motif of the "Song of the Volga Boatmen," but the tempo is too fast for the action which it accompanies.

However, in spite of these faults, which are of a very minor character, "The Trail of '98" is an excellent picture, well set, faultlessly shot and marvelously acted.

In a Metro-Movietone short subject, Johnny Marvin sings two numbers in a very acceptable manner: "Old Man Sunshine" and Heartbroken, Lonely and Blue."

Movietone News and an M-G-M News release furnish the current history events of the week.

The thematic prelude, consisting of the theme song, "I Found Gold When I Found You," with embellishments, is admirably played by the house orchestra under the direction of Claude Burrows.

FOX

"CAPT. LASH." Fox picture with music and sound effects, directed by John Blystone, starring Victor McLaglen, with Claire Windsor and Clyde Cook also featured. Reviewed Saturday night by C. Ransom.

Rough stuff on the sea, between Sydney and Singapore, besides more in both of those remote and therefore romantic ports. The love life of a burly boss stoker, unminced and unmoralized. Dens and byways of unholy waterfronts, the sweat and grime of the stokehole, the loose and brutal manners of an underworld, with a band of crooks contributing the only relieving touches of surface refinement. Whoever finds no offense to the appetite in these materials will relish "Captain Lash."

It is a good story, honestly and intelligently told. It is agreeably free from false sentiment, cooked-up emotions and illogical turns of action. In fact, it would be wise to take about a dozen common movie directors and tie them down in front of this screen for about a week. Then to get new directors.

The redoubtable Victor McLaglen, as "Captain" Lash, chief stoker of a passenger liner, first appears on the streets of Sydney, with the firm intention of leaving the women alone, in which resolve he has the support of his diminutive Cockney buddy, deliciously played by Clyde Cook, who has the time of his life. Woman is inevitable and leads to a glorious fight. On the liner, bound for Singapore, a type of woman wholly new to the stoker's usual questing takes an interest in him. He believes her a lady, and her beauty and graciousness lift him out of his cynical self with a pathetic compulsion. She is really an elegant jewel thief, and she uses him merely to smuggle her booty ashore on arrival. Disillusion, following a cleverly contrived climax, returns the captain to the more appropriate and welcoming arms of the particular "Babe" whom he had spurned on arriving at Singapore.

There is some unusually good acting in this piece, not the least of which is contributed by Claire Windsor as the beautiful and treacherous robber woman. Clyde Cook and his concertina are a whole show of their own. Babe, of Singapore, is a well-done bit by Jane Winton. In fact, the seaports swarm with good bits and with walking "atmosphere." It is a flawless production of its kind.

Of high importance on the Fox program is the new Movietone musical comedy, "The Belle of Samoa," in which Clark and McCullough go through their familiar motions and some new cracks, and Lois Moran attempts to startle the world by exchanging her demureness for brazenness. After all, personality is deeper than clothing, and she seems to be only pretending. A partly real South Sea chorus brings such novelty as drums and exotic shuffling may offer, and there is a special South Sea dancer who seems to know just what to do. As a musical comedy, the show has a sort of a chopped-off effect.

The new stage show includes Nat Spector, a good contortionist; some foreign tumblers who make whoopee; Zara Lee, who sings excellently, and some others, as well as the handsome line of Dancing Foxettes. One Buddy Page appears as a new master of ceremonies and plays the piano in a manner that promises much.

EARLE

"ANNAPOLIS." Pathe sound picture featuring John Mack Brown and Jeannette Loff. Adapted from Prof. Pease's story, "Annapolis," and directed by Christy Cabanne. Reviewed Saturday afternoon by John L. Coontz.

It is a popular belief that the human equation in life is submerged when American young manhood steps across the threshold of either of our national service institutions—the Naval Academy at Annapolis or the Military Academy at West Point. A view of "Annapolis," at the Earle, effectually dispels this delusion. It is an intensely human picture; one that gives an intimate view of life among embryo admiral "as is."

"Annapolis" is motivated by love and that high sense of honor which the service—both military and naval—instills in those who adopt it for a calling.

Bill Curtis and Herbert Duncan are two youths destined for the academy. They meet en route and strike up an acquaintanceship that lasts—for the nonce—until assignment to quarters as students properly enrolled for the four years' training they are to receive. A trivial difference at this point embitters them against each other, and so matters stand until they come to their senses. Fast friends now they proceed amicably along the highway of their careers until one Betty, Juliet to her Romeo, "Herb," appears on the scene. At least until a chance acquaintance with "Bill," and later an assignment to him by "Herb" to carry her to the annual hop, forbidden him by press of duties, convinces her that here is her "own true love," despite previous commitments. As a result the plot thickens and before it clears up there is a bit of unsavory action unreeled. It results, however, only in added zest to the story.

The heroes to this piece are John Mack Brown, accredited—and not without reason—with being "a fast-rising young leading man," and Hugh Allen. The "femme" is the Mary Pickfordish blonde, Jeneette Loff. The trio make a happy ensemble.

The film is from the book "Annapolis," by Prof. Royal Pease, English instructor at the academy. It owes its sound production to excellent transcription by Christie Cabanne and F. McGrew Willis. The locale fluctuates between Annapolis and Washington, giving to the picture something of local color.

The supplemental celluloid for the week is a two-reel, all-talking frivolity with George Le Maire, a friend and two "janes." "The joy ride" rambles about joyously and noisily to a successful conclusion of diversified amusement.

The program is tapered off with a Pathe sound picture of Hawks' record-breaking transcontinental flight from the west coast to New York, a Paramount newsreel featuring Lindy delivering the first mail by air to Panama, President-elect Hoover and Edison in Florida, the fifty-first Riviera carnival, Tampa, Fla.'s, own carnival; Jack Frost's antics in the north, Japanese pearl fishing, truffle hunting in France, the Winchester house of mystery in California and scientific curiosities.

A diversified bill that packed a lot of kicks to a packed house, at least this reviewer found it so Saturday afternoon when he essayed to negotiate a seat.
